By this reckoning he is more ſhrew than ſhe. Shakeſpeare.
A man had got a ſhrew to his wife, and there could be no quiet in the houſe for her. L'Eſtrange.

Her fallow cheeks her envious mind did ſhew,
Her features ſpoke aloud the ſhrew. Dryden.

Every one of them, who is a ſhrew in domeſtick life, is now become a fool to politicks. Addiſ. Freeholder

SHREWD. adj. [Contracted from ſhrewed.]

1. Having the qualities of a ſhrew; malicious, troubleſome, curſt.

Her eldeſt ſiſter is ſo curſt and ſhrewd,
That 'till the father rids his hands of her,
Never love muſt ſue to her. Shakeſpeare.

2. Miſchievouſly ſly, cunning, more artful than good.

It was a ſhrewd ſaying of the old monk, that two kind of priſons would ſerve for all offenders, an inquiſition and a bedlam: if any man ſhould deny the being of a God, and the immortality of the ſoul, ſuch a one ſhould be put into the firſt, as being a deſperate heretick; but if any man ſhould profeſs to believe theſe things, and yet allow himſelf in any known wickedneſs, ſuch a one ſhould be put into bedlam. Tillotſon.

A ſpiteful ſaying gratifies ſo many little paſſions, that it meets with a good reception; and the man who utters it is looked upon as a ſhrewd ſatiriſt. Addiſon.

Corruption proceeds from employing thoſe who have the character of ſhrewd worldly men, inſtead of ſuch as have had a liberal education, and trained up in virtue. Addiſon.

3. Bad; ill-betokening.

Scarce any man paſſes to a liking of ſin in others, but by firſt practiſing it himſelf; and conſequently we may take it for a ſhrewd indication, and ſign, whereby to judge of thoſe who have ſinned with too much caution, to ſuffer the world to charge ſins directly upon their converſation. South's Serm.

4. Painful, pinching, dangerous; miſchievous.

Every of this number,
That have endur'd ſhrewd nights and days with us,
Shall ſhare the good of our returned fortune. Shakeſpeare.

When a man thinks he has a ſervant, he finds a traitor that eats his bread, and is ready to do him a miſchief, and a ſhrewd turn, than an open adverſary. South's Sermons.

No enemy is ſo deſpicable but he may do a body a ſhrewd turn. L'Eſtrange.

SHREW'DLY. adv. [from ſhrewd.]

1. Miſchievouſly; deſtructively.

This practice hath moſt ſhrewdly paſt upon thee. Shakeſp.

At Oxford, his youth and want of experience in martiall ſervice, had ſomewhat been ſhrewdly touched, even before the fumes of popular liberty were ſet open. Wotton.

2. Vexatiouſly. It is uſed commonly of ſlight miſchief, or in ironical expreſſion.

The obſtinate and ſchiſmatical are like to think themſelves ſhrewdly hurt, forſooth, by being cut off from that body which they chooſe not to be of. South's Sermons.

A caſual alluſion rubb'd upon the ſore;
Yet ſeem'd ſhe not to winch, tho ſhrewdly pain'd. Dryden.

3. With ſtrong ſuſpicion.

Four per cent. increaſes not the number of lenders; as any man at firſt hearing will ſhrewdly ſuſpect it. Locke.

SHREW'DNESS. n. ſ. [from ſhrewd.]

1. Sly cunning; archneſs.

Her garbones, which not wanted ſhrewdneſs of policy too, did you too much diſquiet. Shakeſpeare.

SHREW'ISHNESS. n. ſ. [from ſhrewiſh.] The quarrels of a ſhrew, clamorouſneſs, petulance; clamorous ells.

I have no gift in ſhrewiſhneſs,
I am a right maid for my cowardſhip.
Let her not ſtrike me. Shakeſpeare.

SHREW'MOUSE. n. ſ. [ſcrepa, Saxon.] A mouſe of which the bite is generally ſuppoſed venomous, and to which vulgar tradition aſſigns ſuch malignity, that ſhe is ſaid to lame the foot over which ſhe runs. I am informed that all theſe reports are calumnious, and that her feet and teeth are equally harmleſs with thoſe of any other little mouſe. Our anceſtors however looked on her with ſuch terrour, that they are ſuppoſed to have given her name to a ſcolding woman, whom for her venom they call a ſhrew.

To SHRIEK. v. n. [ſkriger, Daniſh; ſcritcolare, Italian.] To cry out inarticulately with anguiſh or horrour, to ſcream.

On top whereof ay dwelt the ghaſtly owl,
Shrieking his balefull note. Fa. Queen.
It was the owl that ſhriek'd, the fatal bellman
Which gives the ſtern'ſt good-night. Shakeſpeare.
Were I the wretch that watch'd,
I'd ſhriek, that even your ears ſhould rift to hear me. Shak.

I ſaw my lord ſo near deſtruction,
'Twas ſhriek'd myſelf awake. Denham.

Hark! Peace!
At this ſhe ſhriek'd aloud, the mournful train
Echo'd her grief. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
Why did you ſhriek out? Dryden's Spaniſh Fryar.

SHRIEK. n. ſ. [ſkrig, Daniſh, ſcrocco, Italian.] An inarticulate cry of anguiſh or horrour.

Una hearing evermore
His ruefull ſhrieks and groanings, often tore
Her guiltleſs garments, and her golden hair,
For pity of his pain. Fa. Queen.

I alone have been my ſenſes would have cool'd,
To hear a night ſhriek, and my fell of hair
Would at a dreadful treatiſe riſe and ſtir
As life were in't. Shakeſpear's Macbeth.

The corps of Action, and the reſt are ſhown,
Shrieks, clamours, murmurs, fill the frighted town. Dryd.

SHRIFT n. ſ. [ſcrift, Saxon.] Confeſſion made to a prieſt.

A word out of ſeaſon
Often hath
Bernardine's head. I will give a preſent ſhrift,
And will adviſe him for a better place. Shakeſpeare.

My lord ſhall never reſt,
I'll watch him tame, and talk him out
Has bed ſhall ſeem a ſchool, his board a ſhrift. Shakeſp.

The duke's commands were abſolute,
Therefore my lord, addreſs you to your ſhrift,
And be yourſelf, for you muſt die this inſtant. Rowe.

SHRIGHT, for ſhrieked. Spenſer.

SHRILL. [A word ſuppoſed to be made per onomatopœiam, in imitation of the thing expreſſed, which naked it images very happily.] Sounding with a piercing, tremulous, or vibratory ſound.

And fetch ſhrill echoes from the hollow earth. Shakeſpeare.

I have heard
The cock that is the trumpet to the morn,
Doth with his lofty and ſhrill ſounding throat
Awake the god of day. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

Have I not heard
From the dread ſummit of this chalky bourn!
Look up a height, the ſhrill gorged lark ſo far
Cannot be ſeen or heard Shakeſpeare's K. Lear.

Upſprings the lark,
Shrill voic'd and loud, the meſſenger of morn. Thomſon.

To SHRILL. v. n. [from the adjective.] To pierce the ear with ſharp and quick vibrations of ſound.

The ſun of all the world is dim and dark;
O heavy herſe,
Break we our pipes that ſhrill'd as loud as lark,
O careful verſe. Spenſer.

Hark how the muſtrels 'gin to ſhrill aloud
Their merry muſick that reſounds from far,
The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling crowd
That well agree withouten breach or jar Spenſer.

A ſhrilling trumpet ſounded from on high,
And unto battle bade themſelves addreſs Shakeſpeare.

Here, no clarion's ſhrilling note
The muſe's green retreat can pierce;
The grove, from noiſy camps remote,
Is only vocal with my verſe. Fenton's Ode to Lord Gower.

The females round,
Maids, wives, and matrons mix a ſhrilling ſound. Pope.

Wearied and gall'd with their necessities,
Durst have thought it? Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
Our soul, whose country's heav'n and God her father,
Into this world, corruption's sink, is sent;
Yet so much in her travail she doth gather,
That she returns home wiser than she went. Donne.

SI'NLESS. adj. [from sin.] Exempt from sin.
Led on, yet sinless, with desire to know,
What nearer might concern him, how this world
Of heav'n, and earth conspicuous, first began. Milton.
At that tasted fruit,
The sun, as from Thyestean banquet, turn'd
His course; else how had the world
Inhabited, though sinless, more than now
Avoided pinching cold, and scorching heat? Milton.
Infernal ghosts and hellish furies round
Environ'd thee, some howl'd, some yell'd, some shriek'd,
Some bent at thee their fiery darts, while thou
Sat'st unappall'd in calm and sinless peace Milton.
No thoughts like mine his sinless soul profane,
Observant of the right. Dryden's Ovid
Did God, indeed, insist on a sinless and unerring observance of all this multiplicity of duties; had the Christian dispensation provided no remedy for our lapses, we might cry out with Balaam, Alas! who should live, if God did this? Rogers.

SI'NLESSNESS. n. f. [from sinless] Exemption from sin.
We may the less admire at his gracious condescensions to those, the sinfulness of whose condition will keep them from turning his vouchsafements into any thing but occasions of joy and gratitude. Boyle's Scraphick Love.

SI'NNER. n. f. [from sin.]

1. One at enmity with God; one not truly or religiously good
Let the boldest sinner take this one consideration along with him, when he is going to sin, that whether the sin he is about to act ever comes to be pardoned or no, yet, as soon as it is acted, it quite turns the balance, puts his salvation upon the venture, and makes it ten to one odds against him. South.

2. An offender; a criminal.
Here's that which is too weak to be a sinner, honest water, which ne'er left man i' th' mire. Shakespeare's Timon.

Had Ajax been employ'd, our ſlacken'd ſails
Had ſtill at Aulis waited happy gales. Dryden.

2. To relax; to remit.

This makes the pulſes beat, and lungs reſpire;
This holds the ſinews like a bridle's reins,
And makes the body to advance, retire,
To turn or ſtop, as ſhe them ſlacks or ſtrains. Davies.

Taught power's due uſe to people and to kings,
Taught nor to ſlack nor ſtrain its tender ſtrings. Pope.

3. To eaſe; to mitigate. Philips ſeems to have uſed it by miſtake for ſlake.

Men, having been brought up at home under a ſtrict rule of duty, always reſtrained by ſharp penalties from lewd behaviour, ſo ſoon as they come thither, where they ſee laws more ſlackly tended, and the hard reſtraint, which they were uſed unto, now ſlacked, they grow more looſe. Spenſer.

If there be cure or charm
To reſpite or deceive, or ſlack the pain
Of this ill manſion. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

On our account has Jove,
Indulgent, to all moons ſome ſucculent plant
Allow'd, that poor helpleſs man might ſlack
His preſent thirſt, and matter find for toil. Philips.

4. To remit for want of eagerneſs.

My guards
Are you, great powers, and th' unbated ſtrength
Of a firm conſcience; which ſhall arm each ſtep
Ta'en for the ſtate, and teach me ſlack no pace. Ben. Johnſ.

With ſuch delay well pleas'd, they ſlack their courſe. Milt.

5. To cauſe to be remitted.

You may ſooner by imagination quicken or ſlack a motion, than raiſe or ceaſe it; as it is eaſier to make a dog go ſlower than make him ſtand ſtill. Bacon.

This doctrine muſt ſuperſede and ſlacken all induſtry and endeavour, which is the loweſt degree of that which hath been promiſed to be accepted by Chriſt; and leave nothing to us to deliberate or attempt, but only to obey our fate. Hammond.

Extol not riches then, the toil of fools,
The wiſe man's cumbrance, if not ſnare; more apt
To ſlacken virtue, and abate her edge,
Than prompt her to do aught may merit praiſe. Milton.

Balls of this metal ſlack'd Atlanta's pace,
And on the am'rous youth beſtow'd the race. Waller.

One conduces to the poet's aim; which he is driving on in every line: the other ſlackens his pace, and diverts him from his way. Dryden.

6. To relieve; to unbend.

Here have I ſeen the king, when great affairs
Gave leave to ſlacken and unbend his cares,
Attended to the chaſe by all the flow'r
Of youth, whoſe hopes a nobler prey devour. Denham

7. To with-hold; to uſe leſs liberally.

He that ſo generally is good, muſt of neceſſity hold his virtue to you, whoſe worthineſs would ſtir it up where it wanted, rather than ſlack it where there is ſuch abundance. Shakeſp.

8. To crumble; to deprive of the power of coheſion.

Some unſlacked lime cover with aſhes, and let it ſtand till rain comes to ſlack the lime; then ſpread them together. Mort.

9. To neglect.

Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance
From thoſe that ſhe calls ſervants, or from mine?
—If then they chanc'd to ſlack ye,
We could controul them. Shakeſp. King Lear.

This good chance, that thus much favoureth,
He ſlacks not. Daniel's Civil War.

Stack not the good preſage, while heav'n inſpires
Our minds to dare, and gives the ready fires. Dryden.

10. To repreſs; to make leſs quick or forcible.

And thrice he routed all his foes, and thrice he slew the slain. Dryden.

To SLAKE v. a [from sleck, Skinner; from sleck, Islandick, to quench, Mr Lye.]

1. To quench, to extinguish.

He did always strive
Himself with salves to health for to restore,
And slake the heavenly fire that raged evermore. Fa. Queen.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart. Shakesp. H. VI.

She with her cold hand slakes
His spirits, the sparks of life, and chills his heart. Crashaw.

From Julus' head
A lambent flame arose, which gently spread
Around his brows, and on his temples fed:
Amaz'd, with running water we prepare
To quench the sacred fire, and slake his hair. Dryden.

The fragrant fruit from bending branches shake,
And with the crystal stream their thirst at pleasure slake.
Richmore's Creation.

Coarse are his meals, the fortune of the chace,
Amidst the running stream he slakes his thirst. Addis. Cato.

2. It is used of lime, so that it is uncertain whether the original notion of To slack or slake lime be to powder or quench it.

That which he saw happened to be fresh lime, and gathered before any rain had fallen to slake it. Woodward

To SLAKE. v. n. [This is apparently from slack.] To grow less tense; to be relaxed.

If the the body's nature did partake,
Her strength would with the body's strength decay;

Slander Valentine
With falsehood, cowardice, and poor descent. Shakespeare.

He hath slandered thy servant unto the king 2 Sa. xix. 27.

Give me leave to speak as earnestly in truly commending it, as you have done in untruly and unkindly defacing and slandering it. Whitgifte.

Thou do'st with lies the throne invade,
By practice harden'd in thy slandering trade;
Obtending heav'n for whate'er ills befal,
And sputt'ring under specious names thy gall. Dryden.

Of all her dears she never slander'd one,
But cares not if a thousand are undone. Dryden.

SLA'NDER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. False invective.

When slanders do not live in tongues;
When cut-purses come not to throngs. Stat. K. Lear

Since that, we hear he is in arms,
We think not so;
Yet charge the consul with our harms,
That let him go
So in our censure of the state
We shall do warier,
And make the careful magistrate
The mark of slander. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

2. Disgrace, reproach.

Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb,
Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins. Shakesp. R. III.

He ſmote the ſledded Pollack on the ice. Shakeſpeare.

SLEDGE n. ſ. [ſleeg, Saxon; ſleggia, Iſlandick.]

1. A large heavy hammer.

They him ſpying, both with greedy force,
At once upon him ran, and him beſet,
With ſtrokes of mortal ſteel, without remorſe,

The painful ſmith, with force of fervent heat,
The hardeſt iron ſoon doth mollify,
That with his heavy ſledge he can it beat,
And faſhion to what he it liſt apply. Spenſer.

The uphand ſledge is uſed by under workmen, when the work is not of the largeſt, yet requires help to batter and draw it out: they uſe it with both their hands before them, and ſeldom lift their hammer higher than their head. Moxon.

Ariſtotle aſcribes it unto the ſwiftneſs of that motion; but it would follow that the quick ſtroak of a light hammer ſhould be of greater efficacy, than any ſofter and more gentle ſtroking of a great ſledge. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

2. A carriage without wheels, or with very low wheels; properly a ſled. See SLED.

In Lancaſhire, they uſe a ſort of ſledges made with thick wheels, to bring their marl out, drawn with one horſe. Mort.

Let me have men about me that are fat,
Sleek-headed men, and ſuch as ſleep a-nights. Shakeſpeare.

Envy!
How eagerly ye follow my diſgrace,
As if it fed ye; and how ſleek and wanton
Y' appear in ev'ry thing may bring my ruin. Shakeſpeare.

Yet are the men more looſe than they,
More kemb'd, and bath'd, and rub'd, and trim'd,
More ſleek'd, more ſoft, and ſlacker limb'd. Ben. Johnſon.

What time the groves were clad in green,
The fields all dreſt in flowers,
And that the ſleek-haired nymphs were ſeen,
To ſeek them ſummer bowers. Drayton

The pureſt paſteboard, with a ſleek ſtone rub ſmooth, and as even as you can. Peacham.

As in gaze admiring, oft he bow'd
His turret creſt, and ſleek enamel'd neck,
Fawning. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Thoſe rugged names to our like mouths grow ſleek,
That would have made Quintilian ſtare and gaſp. Milton.

Thy head and hair are ſleek,
And then thou kemb'ſt the tuzzes on thy cheek Dryden.

So ſleek her ſkin, ſo faultleſs was her make,
Ev'n Juno did unwilling pleaſure take
To ſee ſo fair a rival Dryden.

1. To take reſt, by ſuſpenſion of the mental powers.

I've watch'd and travel'd hard:
Some time I ſhall ſleep out; the reſt I'll whiſtle. Shakeſp.

Where's Pede?—go you, and where you find a maid,
That, ere ſhe ſleep, hath thrice her prayers ſaid,
Rein up the organs of her fantaſy
Sleep ſhe as ſound as careleſs infancy;
But thoſe that ſleep, and think not on their ſins,
Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, ſhoulders, ſides, and ſhins. Shakeſpeare's Merry Wives of Windſor.

If the man be poor, thou ſhalt not ſleep with his pledge. Exod.

Sleep on now, and take your reſt, behold the hour is at hand. Matth. xxvi. 45.

Peace, good reader! do not weep,
Peace! the lovers are aſleep.
They, ſweet turtles! folded lie,
In the laſt knot that love could tie.
Let them ſleep, let them ſleep on,
Till this ſtormy night be gone,
And the eternal morrow dawn,
Then the curtains will be drawn,
And they waken with that light,
Whoſe day ſhall never ſleep in night. Craſhaw.

Thoſe who at any time ſleep without dreaming, can never be convinced that their thoughts are for four hours busy without their knowing it. Locke.

Heav'n will one day open
The king's eyes, that ſo long have ſlept upon
This bold, bad man. Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

6. To be unnoticed, or unattended.

You ever
Have wiſh'd the ſleeping of this buſineſs, never Deſir'd it to be ſtirr'd Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

SLEEP. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Repoſe; reſt, ſuſpenſion of the mental powers, ſlumber

Methought I heard a voice cry ſleep no more!
Macbeth doth murder ſleep; the innocent ſleep,
Sleep that knits up the ravell'd ſleeve of care;
The birth of each day's life, ſore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds, great nature's ſecond courſe,
Chief nouriſher in life's feaſt. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

Cold calleth the ſpirits to ſuccour; and therefore they cannot ſo well cloſe and go together in the head, which is ever requiſite to ſleep. And for the ſame cauſe, pain and noiſe hinder ſleep; and darkneſs furthereth ſleep. Bacon.

Beaſts that ſleep in winter, as wild bears, during their ſleep wax very fat, though they eat nothing. Bacon.

His faſten'd hands the rudder keep,
And fix'd on heav'n, his eyes repel invading ſleep. Dryden.

Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd,
His hat adorn'd with wings diſcloſ'd the god,
And in his hand the ſleep-compelling rod. Dryden.

Infants ſpend the greateſt part of their time in ſleep, and are ſeldom awake but when hunger calls for the teat, or ſome pain forces the mind to perceive it. Locke.

SLEE'PER. n. ſ. [from ſleep.]

1. One who ſleeps, one who is not awake.

Sound muſick; come my queen, take hand with me.
And rock the ground whereon theſe ſleepers be. Shakeſp.

What's the buſineſs,
That ſuch an hideous trumpet calls to parley
The ſleepers of the houſe? Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

In ſome countries, a plant which ſhutteth in the night, openeth in the morning, and openeth wide at noon, the inhabitants ſay is a plant that ſleepeth. There be ſleepers enow then; for almoſt all flowers do the like. Bacon.

Night is indeed the province of his reign;
Yet all his dark exploits no more contain
Than a ſpy taken, and a ſleeper ſlain Dryden.

He muſt be no great eater, drinker, nor ſleeper, that will diſcipline his ſenſes, and exert his mind: every worthy undertaking requires both. Grew.

2. A lazy inactive drone.
3. That which lies dormant, or without effect.

Her false sleights do employ. Fairy Queen.
[illegible]
There hangs a vap'rous drop, profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground,
And that distill'd by magick sleights,
Shall raise such artificial sprights,
As, by the strength of their illusion
Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Out stept the ample size
Of mighty Ajax, huge in strength, to him, Laertes' son,
That crafty one as huge in sleight. Chapman.
She could not so convey
The massy substance of that idol great,
What sleight had she the wardens to betray?
What strength to heave the goddess from her seat? Fairfax.
In the wily snake
Whatever sleights, none would suspicious mark,
As from his wit, and native subtility
Proceeding. Milton.
Doubtless the pleasure is as great
Of being cheated, as to cheat,
As lookers on feel most delight,
That least perceive the juggler's sleight. Hudibras.
Good humour is but a sleight of hand, or a faculty making truths look like appearances, or appearances like truths [illegible]
When we hear death related, we are all willing to favour the sleight, when the poet does not too grossly impose upon us. Dryden.
While innocent he scorns ignoble slight,
His honest friends preserve him by a sleight. Swift.

SLEIGHT. n. s. [This word is apparently misprinted for seine.] Is a net of about forty fathoms in length, with which they encompass a part of the sea, and draw the same on land by two ropes fastned at its ends, together with such fish as lighteth within his precinct. Carew.

SLOT. n. [slod, Islandick.] The track of a deer.

SLOTH. n. f. [plapð, plæpð, Saxon. It might therefore be not improperly written sloath, but that it seems better to regard the orthography of the primitive slow.]

1. Slowness, tardiness.

These cardinals trifle with me. I abhor
This dilatory sloth and tricks of Rome. Shak. Henry VIII.

2. Laziness, sluggishness, idleness.

Pale of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand,
Hog in sloth, fox in stealth. Shakesp. King Lear.

They change their course to pleasure, ease, and sloth. Milt.

Industry approach'd,
And rous'd him from his miserable sloth. Thomson's Autumn.

The sloth is an animal of so slow a motion, that he will be three or four days at least in climbing up and coming down a tree; and to go the length of fifty paces on plain ground, requires a whole day. Grew.

SLOTHFUL. adj. [sloth and full.] Idle, lazy, sluggish, inactive, indolent, full of motion.

He that is slothful in his work, is brother to him that is a great waster. Prov. xviii. 9.

The desire of the slothful killeth him, for his hands refuse to labour. Prov. xxi. 25.

To vice industrious, but to nobler deeds
Timorous and slothful. Milton.

Flora commands those nymphs and knights,
Who liv'd in slothful ease and loose delights,
Who never acts of honour durst pursue,
The men inglorious knights, the ladies all untrue. Dryden.

The very soul of the slothful does effectually but lie drowning in his body, and the whole man is totally given up to his senses. L'Estrange.

SLOTHFULLY. adv. [from slothful.] With sloth.

SLOTHFULNESS. n. f. [from slothful.] Idleness, lazyness; sluggishness, inactivity.

To trust to labour without prayer, argueth impiety and prophaneness, it maketh light of the providence of God: and although it be not the intent of a religious mind, yet it is the fault of those men whose religion wanteth light of a mature judgment to direct it, when we join with our prayer slothfulness and neglect of convenient labour. Hooker.

Slothfulness casteth into a deep sleep, and an idle soul shall suffer hunger. Prov. xix. 15.

SLOUCH. n. f. [sloff, Danish, stupid.]

1. A downcast look, a depression of the head. In Scotland, an ungainly gait, as also the person whose gait it is.

Our doctor has every quality that can make a man useful; but, alas! he hath a sort of slouch in his walk. Steele.

2. A man who looks heavy and clownish.

Begin thy carrols then, thou vacant [illegible]
Be thine the oaken staff, or mine the pouch. Gay.

To SLOUCH. v. n. [from the noun.] To have a downcast clownish look.

SLOVEN. n. [sloef, Dutch, ysloven, Welsh, nasty, shabby.] A man recently negligent of cleanliness, a man dirtily dressed.

The ministers came to church in handsome holiday apparel, and that master did not think them bound by the law of God to go like slovens. Hooker.

Assist in things about thee cleanliness,
That all may gladly board thee as a flow'r.
Slovens take up their stock of nastiness
Beforehand, and anticipate their last hour. Herbert.

For as when slovens do amiss
At others doors. Hudibras

You laugh, half beau, half floven if I ſtand;
My wig half powder, and all ſnuff my hand. Pope.

SLO'VENLINESS n. ſ. [from floveny.] Indecent negligence of dreſs; neglect of cleanlineſs.

Slovenineſs is the worſt ſign of a hard ſtudent, and civility the beſt exerciſe of the remiſs; yet not to be exact in the phraſe of compliment, or geſtures of courteſy. Wotton.

SLO'VENLY adj. [from floven.] Negligent of dreſs; negligent of neatneſs, not neat, not cleanly.

Æſop at laſt found out a floveny lazy fellow, lolling at his eaſe, as if he had nothing to do. L'Eſtrange.

SLO'VENLY adv. [from floven.] In a coarſe inelegant manner.

I hang my cloaths on ſomewhat flovenly, I no ſooner went in but he frowned upon me. Pope.

SLO'VENRY. n. ſ. [from floven.] Dirtineſs; want of neatneſs.

Our gayneſs and our gilt are all beſmirch'd
With rainy marching in the painful field
There's not a piece of feather in our hoſt
And time hath worn us into floverny. Shakeſp. H. V.

SLOUGH n. ſ. [ſlog, Saxon.]

1. A deep miry place, a bog full of dirt.

The Scots were in a fallow field, whereunto the Engliſh could not enter, but over a croſs ditch and a ſlough, in paſſing whereof many of the Engliſh horſe were plunged, and ſome maimed. Hayward.

The ways being foul, twenty to one,
He's here ſtuck in a ſlough, and overthrown. Milton.

A carter had laid his waggon faſt in a ſlough. L'Eſtrange.

2. The ſkin which a ſerpent caſts off at his periodical renovation.

Thy fates open their hands, let thy blood and ſpirit embrace them, and to inure thyſelf to what thou art like to be, caſt thy humane ſlough, and appear freſh, Shak. Twelfth Night.

When the mind is quicken'd,
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowſy grave, and newly move,
With caſted ſlough and freſh legerity. Shakeſpeare.

[illegible]
With ſhining checker'd ſlough, doth ſting a child,
That for the beauty thinks it excellent. Shak. Hen VI.

Oh let not ſleep my cloſing eyes invade
In open plains, or in the ſecret ſhade,
When he, renew'd in all the ſpeckl'd pride
Of pompous youth, has caſt his ſlough aſide;
And in his Summer livery rolls along,
Trail and brandiſhing his forky tongue. Dryden.

ſlough of an Engliſh viper, that is, the cuticula, they caſt off twice every year, at ſpring and fall, the ſeparation begins at the head, and is finiſhed in twenty-four hours. Grew.

The body, which we leave behind in this viſible world, is as the womb or ſlough from whence we iſſue, and are born into the other. Grew's Coſmo.

3. The part that ſeparates from a ſoul ſore.

At the next dreſſing I found a ſlough come away with the [illegible]

SLOUGHY. adj. [from ſlough.] Miry; boggy; muddy.

That cuſtom ſhould not be allowed of cutting ſcrawſ in low grounds ſloughy underneath, which turn into bog. Swift.

SLOW. adj. [ſlap, ſleap, Saxon; ſleuw, Friſick.]

1. Not ſwift, not quick of motion; not ſpeedy; not having velocity; wanting celerity.

Me thou think'ſt not ſlow,
Who ſince the morning hour ſet out from heav'n,
Where God reſides, and on mid-day arriv'd
In Eden, diſtance inexpreſſible. Milton.

Where the motion is ſo ſlow as not to ſupply a conſtant train of freſh ideas to the ſenſes, the ſenſe of motion is loſt. Locke.

2. Late; not happening in a ſhort time.

Theſe changes in the heav'ns, though ſlow, produc'd
Like change on ſea and land, ſidereal blaſt. Milton.

3. Not ready, not prompt, not quick.

I am ſlow of ſpeech, and a ſlow tongue. Ex. iv. 10.

Mine ear ſhall not be ſlow, mine eye not ſhut. Milton.

The ſlow of ſpeech make in dreams unpremeditated harangues, or converſe readily in languages that they are but little acquainted with. Addiſon.

4. Dull; inactive; tardy, ſluggiſh.

Fix'd on defence, the Trojans are not ſlow
To guard their ſhore from an expected foe. Dryden.

5. Not haſty; acting with deliberation; not vehement.

The Lord is merciful, and ſlow to anger. Common Prayer.

He that is ſlow to wrath is of great underſtanding. Prov.

6. Dull; heavy in w[illegible]

The politick and wiſe
Are ſly ſlow things with circumſpective eyes. Pope.

[illegible]
This ſlow-pac'd ſoul, which late did cleave
T' a body, and went but by the body's leave,
Twenty perchance or thirty mile a day,
Diſpatches in a minute all the way
'Twixt heav'n and earth Donne.

To the ſhame of ſlow-endeavouring art
Thy eaſy numbers flow. [illegible]

This day's death denounc'd, if ought I ſee,
Will prove no ſudden, but a ſlow-paced evil,
A long day's dying to augment our pain. Milton's Par. Loſt.

For eight ſlow-circling years by tempeſts toſt. Pope.

Some demon urg'd
T' explore the fraud with guile oppoſ'd to guile,
Slow-pacing thrice around th' inſidious pile. Pope.

To SLOW v. a. [from the adjective.] To omit by dilatorineſs; to delay, to procraſtinate. Not in uſe.

Now do you know the reaſon of this haſte?
—I would I knew not why it ſhould be ſlow'd. Shakeſpeare.

SLO'WLY. adv. [from ſlow.]

1. Not ſpeedily; not with celerity; not with velocity.

The gnome rejoicing bears her gift away,
Spreads his black wings, and ſlowly mounts to day Pope.

2. Not ſoon, not early, not in a little time.

The poor remnant of human ſeed peopled their country again ſlowly, by little and little.

Our fathers bent their baneful induſtry
To check a monarchy that ſlowly grew,
But did not France or Holland's fate foreſee,
Whoſe riſing pow'r to ſwift dominion flew. Dryden.

We oft our ſlowly growing works impart,
While images reflect from art to art. Pope.

3. Not haſtily; not raſhly.

4. Not promptly; not readily.

5. Tardily, ſluggiſhly.

The chapel of St. Laurence advances ſo very ſlowly, that 'tis not impoſſible but the family of Medicis may be extinct before their burial place is finiſhed. Addiſon on Italy.

SLO'WNESS. n. ſ. [from ſlow.]

1. Smalneſs of motion; not ſpeed; want of velocity; abſence of celerity or ſwiftneſs.

Providence hath confined theſe human arts, that what any invention hath in the ſtrength of its motion, is abated in the ſlowneſs of it; and what it hath in the extraordinary quickneſs of its motion, muſt be allowed for in the great ſtrength that is required unto it. Wilkins's Math. Magic.

Motion is the abſolute mode of a body, but ſwiftneſs or ſlowneſs are relative ideas. Watts.

2. Length of time in which any thing acts or is brought to paſs, not quickneſs.

Tyrants uſe what art they can to increaſe the ſlowneſs of death. Hooker.

3. Dulneſs to admit conviction or affection.

Chriſt would not heal their infirmities, becauſe of the hardneſs and ſlowneſs of their hearts, in that they believed him not. Bentley's Sermons.

4. Want of promptneſs; want of readineſs.

5. Deliberation, cool delay.

6. Dilatorineſs, procraſtination.

SLO'WWORM. n. ſ. [ſlapſpinn, Saxon.] The blind worm; a ſmall viper, venomous, but ſcarcely mortal.

Though we have found formed ſnakes in the belly of the cecilia, or ſlowworm, yet may the viper emphatically bear the name. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To SLU'BBER. v. a. [Probably from ſubber.]

1. To do any thing lazily, imperfectly, or with idle haſty.

Nature ſhewed ſhe doth not like men, who ſlubber up matters of mean account. Sidney.

Baſſanio told him, he would make ſome ſpeed
Of his return: he anſwer'd, do not ſo,
Slubber not buſineſs for my ſake. Shakeſp. Merch. of Venice.

As they are ſlubbered over, the malignity that remains will ſhow itſelf in ſome chronick diſeaſe, or in ſome ſpecies of the lues venerea. Wiſeman's Surgery.

2. To ſtain; to daub. [This ſeems to be from ſlobber, ſlabber, or ſlaver.]

You muſt be content to ſlubber the gloſs of your new fortunes, with this more ſtubborn and boiſterous expedition Shak.

3. To cover coarſely or carelеſſly.

A man of ſecret ambitious ends, and proportionate counſels, ſmothered under the habit of a ſcholar, and ſlubbered over with a certain rude and clowniſh faſhion, that had the ſemblance of integrity. Wotton.

SLU'BBERDEGULLION. n. ſ. [I ſuppoſe a cant word without derivation.] A paltry, dirty, ſorry wretch.

Quoth ſhe, although thou haſt deſerv'd,
Baſe ſlubberdegullion, to be ſerv'd
As thou did'ſt vow to deal with me,
If thou had'ſt got the victory. Hudibras.

SLUDGE n. ſ. [I ſuppoſe from ſlog, ſlough, Saxon.] Mire; dirt mixed with water.

The earth I made a mere ſoft ſludge or mud. Mortimer.

1. An idler; a drone; a ſlow, heavy, ſleepy, lazy wretch.

Fie, what a ſlug is Haſtings, that he comes not! Shakeſp.

2. An hindrance; an obſtruction.

Uſury dulls and damps all improvements, wherein money would be ſtirring, if it were not for this ſlug. Bacon.

3. A kind of ſlow creeping ſnail.
4. [Slecg, an hammerhead, Saxon.] A cylindrical or oval piece of metal ſhot from a gun.

When fractures are made with bullets or flugs, there the ſcalp and cranium are driven in together. Wiſeman's Surgery.

As, forc'd from wing-guns, lead itſelf can fly,
And pond'rous flugs cut ſwiftly through the ſky. Pope.

To SLUG. v. n. [from the noun.] To lie idle, to play the drone, to move ſlowly.

All he did was to deceive good knights,
And draw them from purſuit of praiſe and fame,
To flug in ſloth and ſenſual delights,
And end their days with irrenowned ſhame. Fairy Queen.

He lay not all night flugging in a cabbin under his mantle, but uſed commonly to keep others waking to defend their lives. Spenſer.

One went flugging on with a thouſand cares. L'Eſtrange.

SLU'GGARD. n. ſ. [from flug.] An idler, a drone, one lazy fellow.

Cry mercy, lords, and watchful gentlemen,
That you have ta'en a tardy ſluggard here. Shakeſp. R. III.

Up, up, ſays avarice; thou ſnor'ſt again,
Stretcheſt thy limbs, and yawn'ſt, but all in vain:
The tyrant lucre no denial takes,
At his command th' unwilling ſluggard wakes. Dryden.

Sprightly May commands our youth to keep
The vigils of her night, and breaks their ſluggard ſleep. Dry.

To SLU'GGARDIZE. v. a. [from ſluggard.] To make idle, to make dronish.

Rather ſee the wonders of the world abroad,
Than, living dully ſluggardiz'd at home,
Wear out thy youth with ſhapeleſs idleneſs. Shakeſpeare.

SLU'GGISH adj. [from flug.] Dull; drowſy; lazy, ſlothful, idle; inſipid; ſlow, inactive, inert.

Sluggiſh idleneſs, the nurſe of ſin,
Upon a ſlothful aſs he choſe to ride Fairy Queen.

The dull billows, thick as troubled mire,
Whom neither wind out of their ſeat could force,
Nor tides did drive out of their ſluggiſh ſource. Spenſ.

One, bolder than the reſt,
With his broad ſword provok'd the ſluggiſh beaſt. Waller.

Matter, being impotent, ſluggiſh, and inactive, hath no power to ſtir or move itſelf. Woodward.

SLU'GGISHLY. adv. [from ſluggiſh.] Dully; not nimbly, lazily, idly, ſlowly.

SLU'GGISHNESS. n. ſ. [from ſluggiſh.] Dulneſs, ſloth; lazi-

The moſt of mankind are inclined by her thither, if they would take the pains, no leſs than birds to fly, and horſes to run; which, if they loſe, it is thro' their own ſluggiſhneſs, and by that means become her prodigies, not her children. H. Johnſ.

It is of great moment to teach the mind to ſhake off its ſluggiſhneſs, and vigorouſly employ itſelf about what reaſon ſhall direct. Locke.

SLUICE. n. ſ. [ſluyſe, Dutch; eſcluſe, French; ſluſa, Italian.] A watergate; a floodgate, a vent for water.

Two other precious drops that ready ſtood,
Each in their cryſtal ſluice, he ere they fell
Kiſs'd, as the gracious ſigns of ſweet remorſe,
And pious awe, that fear'd to have offended. Milton.

Divine Alpheus who, by ſecret ſluice,
Stole under ſeas to meet his Arethuſe. Milton.

If we receive them all, they were more than ſeven; if only the natural ſluices, they were fewer. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

As waters from her ſluices, flow'd
Unbounded ſorrow from her eyes
And ſent her wailings to the ſkies. Prior.

To SLUICE v. a. [from the noun.] To emit by floodgates.

Like a traitor coward,
Sluic'd out his innocent ſoul through ſtreams of blood. Shak.

Venus of liquid ore ſluic'd from the lake. Milton.

You wrong me, if you think I'll ſell one drop
Within theſe veins for pageants; but let honour
Call for my blood, I'll ſluice it into ſtreams,
Turn fortune looſe again to my purſuit,
And let me hunt her through embattl'd foes
In duſty plains, there will I be the firſt. Dryd. Span. Fryar.

SLU'ICY. adj. [from ſluice.] Falling in ſtreams as from a ſluice or floodgate.

And oft whole ſheets deſcend of ſluicy rain,
Suck'd by the ſpongy clouds from off the main:
The lofty ſkies at once come pouring down,
The pronis'd crop and golden labours drown. Dryden.

To SLU'MBER. v. n. [ſlumeran, Saxon; ſluymeren, Dutch.]

1. To ſleep lightly, to be not awake nor in profound ſleep.

He that keepeth Iſrael ſhall neither ſlumber nor ſleep. Pſ.

Conſcience wakes deſpair that ſlumber'd. Milton.

2. To ſleep; to repoſe. Sleep and ſlumber are often confounded.

God ſpeaketh, yet man perceiveth it not; in a dream, in a viſion of the night, when deep ſleep falleth upon men, in ſlumberings upon the bed. Job xxxiii. 15

Have ye choſen this place,
After the toil of battle, to repoſe
Your wearied virtue, for the eaſe you find
To ſlumber here Milton.

3. To be in a ſtate of negligence and ſupineneſs.

To SLU'MBER. v. a.

1. To lay to ſleep.
2. To ſtupify, to ſtun.

Then up he took the ſlumbered ſenſeleſs corſe,
And ere he could out of his ſwoon awake,
Him to his caſtle brought. Fairy Queen.

To honeſt a deed after it was done, or to ſlumber his conſcience in the doing, he ſtudied other incentives. Wotton.

SLU'MBER. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. Light ſleep, ſleep not profound.

And for his dreams, I wonder he's ſo fond
To truſt the mockery of unquiet ſlumbers. Shakeſp. R. III.

From careleſſneſs it ſhall fall into ſlumber, and from a ſlumber it ſhall ſettle into a deep and long ſleep, 'till at laſt, perhaps, it ſhall ſleep itſelf into a lethargy, and that ſuch an one that nothing but hell and judgment ſhall awaken it. South.

Labour and reſt, that equal periods keep;
Obedient ſlumbers that can wake and weep. Pope.

2. Sleep; repoſe.

Boy! Lucius! faſt aſleep? It is no matter;
Enjoy the honey heavy dew of ſlumber. Shakeſ. Jul. C.

Love denies
Reſt to my ſoul, and ſlumber to my eyes
Three days I promiſ'd to attend my doom,
And two long days and nights are yet to come. Dryden.

SLU'MBEROUS adj. [from ſlumber.]

1. Inviting to ſleep; ſoporiferous; cauſing ſleep.

The timely dew of ſleep,
Now falling with ſoft ſlumb'rous weight, inclines
Our eyelids. Milton.

While penſive in the ſilent ſlumb'rous ſhade,
Sleep's gentle pow'rs her drooping eyes invade;
Minerva, Life-like, on embodied air
Impreſs'd the form of Iphthema. Pope's Odyſſey.

There every eye with ſlumb'rous chains ſhe bound,
And daſh'd the flowing goblets to the ground. Pope.

2. Sleepy; not waking.

A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the benefit of ſleep, and do the effects of watching! in this ſlumbery agitation, what have you heard her ſay? Shakeſp. Macbeth.

SLUNG. The preterite and participle paſſive of ſling.

SLUNK. The preterite and participle paſſive of ſink.

Silence accompany'd, for beaſt, and bird,
They to their graſſy couch, theſe to their neſts,
Were ſlunk. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Back to the thicket ſlunk
The guilty ſerpent, and well might; for Eve,
Intent now wholly on her taſte, nought elſe

To SLUR. v. a. [ſtorris, Dutch, naſty; ſtorre, [illegible]

1. To ſully, to ſoil, to contaminate.
2. To put ſlightly; to balk, to miſs.

The atheiſts laugh in their ſleeves, and not a little triumph to ſee the cauſe of theiſm thus betrayed by its profeſſed friends, and the grand argument ſlurred by them, and ſo their work done to their hands Cudworth.

Studious to pleaſe the genius of the times,
With periods, points, and tropes he ſlurs his crimes;
He robb'd not, but he borrow'd from the poor,
And took but with intention to reſtore. Dryden.

3. To cheat; to trick.

What was the publick faith found out for,
But to ſlur men of what they fought for? Hudibras.

Come, ſeven's the main,
Cries Ganymede, the uſual trick
Seven, ſlur a ſix; eleven, a nick. P.

SLUR. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Faint reproach; ſlight diſgrace.

Here's an ape made a king for ſhewing tricks; and the fox is then to put a ſlur upon him, in expoſing him for ſport to the ſcorn of the people. L'Eſtrange.

No one can rely upon ſuch an one, either with ſafety to his affairs, or without a ſlur to his reputation, ſince he that truſts a knave has no other recompence, but to be accounted a fool for his pains. South's Sermon.

SLUT. n. ſ. [ſlodde, Dutch.]

1. A dirty woman.

Cricket, to Windſor chimneys ſhalt thou leap
Where fires thou find'ſt unrak'd, and hearths unſwept,
There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry,
Our radiant queen hates ſluts and ſluttery Shakeſpeare.

The ſallow ſkin is for the ſwarthy put,
And love can make a ſlattern of a ſlut. Dryden.

The veal's all ra[illegible], the butter's turn'd to oil,
And thus I buy good meat for ſluts to ſpoil. King.

2. A

5. A word of light contempt to a woman.

Hold up, you flirt,
Your aprons mountant; you're not othable,
Although I know you'll swear. Shakesp. Timon.

The frogs were ready to leap out of their skins for joy, 'till one crafty old flut in the company advised them to consider a little better on't. L'Estrange.

SLU'TTERY. n. s. [from flut.] The qualities or practice of a slut.

Slutt'ry, to such great excellence opposed,
Should make desire vomit emptiness. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

Where fires thou find'st unrak'd, and hearths unswept,
There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry;
Our radiant queen hates sluts and slutt'ry. Shakespeare.

These make our girls their slattery rue,
By pinching them both black and blue;
And put a penny in their shoe,
The house for cleanly sweeping. Drayton.

A man gave money for a black, upon an opinion that his swarthy colour was rather slattery than nature, and the fault of his master that kept him no cleaner. L'Estrange.

SLU'TTISH. adj. [from slut.] Nasty; not nice; not cleanly; dirty, indecently negligent of cleanness.

All preparations both for food and lodging such as would make one detest niggardness, it is so sluttish a vice. Sidney.

Albeit the mariners do covet store of cabins, yet indeed they are but sluttish dens that breed sickness in peace, serving to cover stealths, and in fight are dangerous to tear men with their splinters. Raleigh's Essays.

Fortune's displeasure is but sluttish, if it smell so strongly as thou speak'st of. I will henceforth eat no fish of fortune's buttering. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

Nastiness of that nation, and sluttish course of life, hath much promoted the opinion, occasioned by their servile condition at first, and inferior ways of parsimony ever since. Brown.

Sloth's disorder fill'd his stable,
And sluttish plenty deck'd her table. Prior.

SLU'TTISHLY. adv. [from sluttish.] In a sluttish manner; nastily; dirtily.

SLU'TTISHNESS. n. s. [from sluttish.] The qualities or practice of a slut; nastiness, dirtiness.

That is only suitable in laying a foul complexion upon a filthy favour, setting forth both in slutt shness. Sidney.

I look on the instinct of this noisome and troublesome creature, the louse, of searching out foul and nasty clothes to harbour and breed in, as an effect of divine providence, designed to deter men and women from sluttishness and fordidness, and to provoke them to cleanliness and neatness. Ray on the Creation.

SLY. adj. [ylwð, Saxon, slippery and metaphorically deceitful, slegur, Islandick.] Meanly artful, secretly nefarious; cunning.

For my sly wyles and subtile craftiness,
That title of the kingdom I possess. Hubberd's Tale.

My great affliction,
If I could bear longer, and not fall
To quarrel with your oppoſeleſs wills,
My ſnuff and loathed part of nature ſhould
Burn itſelf out. Shakeſp. King Lear.

But deareſt heart, and dearer image, ſtay
Alas! true joys at beſt are dreams enough
Though you ſtay here, you paſs too faſt away;
For even at firſt life's taper is a ſnuff Donne.
The ſnuff-diſhes ſhall be of pure gold Ex. xxv. 38.

If the liquor be of a cloſe and glutinous conſiſtency, it may burn without any ſnuff, as we ſee in campbire, and ſome other bituminous ſubſtances, and moſt of the ancient lamps were of this kind, becauſe none have been found with ſuch wicks. Wilk.

3. A candle almoſt burnt out.

Lamentable!
To hide me from the radiant ſun, and ſolace
I' th' dungeon by a ſnuff Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

Of mortal change on earth. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

He ſnuffs the wind, his heels the ſand excite,
But when he ſtands collected in his might,
He roars and promiſes a more ſucceſsful fight. Dryden.

The youth,
Who holds the neareſt ſtation to the light,
Already ſeems to ſnuff the vital air,
And leans juſt forward on a ſhining ſpear. Dryden's Æn.

My troops are mounted, their Numidian ſteeds
Snuff up the wind, and long to ſcour the deſart. Addiſon.

My nag's greateſt fault was ſnuffing up the air about Brackdenſtown, whereby he became ſuch a lover of liberty, that I could ſcarce hold him in. Swift.

2. To ſcent.

The cow looks up, and from afar can find
The change of heav'n, and ſnuffs it in the wind. Dryden.

For thee the bulls rebellow through the groves,
And tempt the ſtream, and ſnuff their abſent loves Dryden.

O'er all the blood-hound boaſts ſuperior ſkill,
To ſcent, to view, to turn, and boldly kill!
His fellows vain alarms rejects with ſcorn,
True to the maſter's voice, and learned horn:
His noſtrils oft, if ancient fame ſing true,
Trace the ſly felon through the tainted dew:
Once ſnuff'd, he follows with unalter'd aim,
Nor odours lure him from the choſen game,
Deep-mouth'd he thunders, and inflam'd he views,
Springs on relentleſs, and to death purſues. Tickell

3. To crop the candle.

The late queen's gentlewoman!
To be her miſtreſs' miſtreſs!
This candle burns not clear: 'tis I muſt ſnuff it,
And out it goes. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

Againſt a communion-day our lamps ſhould be better dreſſed, and our lights ſnuffed, and our religion more active. Taylor's worthy Communicant.

You have got
An office for your talents fit,
To ſnuff the lights, and ſtir the fire,
And get a dinner for your hire. Swift.

To SNUFF v. n.

So. adv. [ꝑa, Saxon, ſoo, Dutch, ſo, German.]

1. In like manner. It anſwers to as either preceding or following. Noting compariſon.

As whom the fables feign of monſtrous ſize,
Titanian or earthborn that warr'd on Jove,
So ſtretch'd out huge in length the arch fiend lay. Milton.

Thick as autumnal leaves that ſtrew the brooks
In Valombroſa, where th' Etrurian ſhades
High over-arch'd embow'r, ſo thick beſtrewn
Abject and loſt lay theſe. Milton.

Fir'd at firſt ſight with what the muſe imparts,
In fearleſs youth we tempt the heights of arts;
So pleas'd at firſt the tow'ring Alps we try,
Mount o'er the vales, and ſeem to tread the ſky. Pope.

As into air the purer ſpirits flow,
And ſep'rate from their kindred dregs below,
So flew her ſoul to its congeneal place. Pope.

2. To ſuch a degree.

Why is his chariot ſo long in coming? Judg. v. 28.

Did you come here a ſtranger or a foe? Dryden.
It concerns every man, with the greateſt ſeriouſneſs, to enquire into thoſe matters whether they be ſo or not. Tillotſon.
No nation ever complained they had too broad, too deep, or too many rivers; they underſtand better than ſo, how to uſe theſe ineſtimable gifts of nature. Bentley.
So when the firſt bold veſſel dar'd the ſeas,
High on the ſtern the Thracian rais'd his ſtrain. Pope.
Whether this be from an habitual motion of the animal ſpirits, or from the alteration of the conſtitution, by ſome more unaccountable way, this is certain that ſo it is. Locke.
7. Therefore, for this reaſon; in conſequence of this.
The god, though loth, yet was conſtrain'd t'obey;
For longer time than that, no living wight,
Below the earth, might ſuffered be to ſtay
So back again him brought to living light. Fairy Queen.
If he ſet induſtriouſly and ſincerely to perform the commands of Chriſt, he can have no ground of doubting but it ſhall prove ſucceſsful to him, and ſo all that he hath to do is to endeavour by prayer and uſe of the means, to qualify himſelf for this bleſſed condition. Hammond's Fundamentals.
Some are fall'n, to diſobedience fall'n,
And ſo from heav'n to deepeſt hell. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt
God makes him in his own image an intellectual creature, and ſo capable of dominion. Locke.
8. On theſe terms; noting a conditional petition anſwered by as
O goddeſs! tell what I would ſay,
Thou know'ſt it, and I feel too much to pray,
So grant my ſuit, as I enforce my might,
In love to be thy champion. Dryden's Knight's Tale
Here then exchange we mutually forgiveneſs,
So may the guilt of all my broken vows,
My perjuries to thee be all forgotten,
As here my ſoul acquits thee of my death,
As here I part without an angry thought. Rowe.
So may kind rains their vital moiſture yield,
And ſwell the future harveſt of thy field. Pope.
9. Provided that; on condition that, mods.
Be not ſad
Evil into the mind of God or man
May come and go, ſo unapprov'd, and leave
No ſpot or blame behind. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt
So the doctrine be but wholſome and edifying, though there ſhould be a want of exactneſs in the manner of ſpeaking or reaſoning, it may be overlooked. Atterbury
Too much of love thy hapleſs friend has ſhown,
Too many giddy fooliſh hours are gone,
May the remaining few know only friendſhip.
So thou, my deareſt, trueſt, beſt Alicia,
Vouchſafe to lodge me in thy gentle heart,
A partner there; I will give up mankind. Rowe.
10. In like manner, noting conceſſion of one propoſition and aſſumption of another, anſwering to as

17. A form of petition.
Ready are th' appellant and defendant,
The armourer and his man, to enter the liſts,
So pleaſe your highneſs to behold the fight. Shak.
18. So much as. However much. This is, I think, not a proper expreſſion.
So much as you admire the beauty of his verſe, his proſe is full as good Pope.
19. So ſo. An exclamation after ſome thing done or known.
I would not have thee anger in thy pain.
So ſo. Shakeſpeare's Othello.
So ſo; it works. now miſtreſs, ſit you aſt. Dryden.
20. So ſo. [coſi coſi, Italian.] Indifferently, not much amiſs nor well.
He's not very tall; yet for his years he's tall,
His leg is but ſo ſo: and yet 'tis well. Shakeſpeare.
Deliver us from the nauſeous repetition of As and So, which ſome ſo ſo writers, I may call them ſo, are continually ſounding in our ears. Felton on the Claſſicks.
21. So then. Thus then it is that; therefore
So then the Volſcians ſtand; but as at firſt
Ready, when time ſhall prompt them, to make road
Upon's again. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.
To a war are required a juſt quarrel, ſufficient forces, and a prudent choice of the deſigns: ſo then, I will firſt juſtify the quarrel, balance the forces, and propound variety of deſigns. Bacon's War with Spain.

To SOAK. v. n. [ſocian, Saxon.]
1. To lie ſteeped in moiſture.
For thy conceit in ſoaking will draw in
More than the common blocks Shakeſpeare.
2. To enter by degrees into pores.
Lay a heap of earth in great frofts upon a hollow veſſel, putting a canvaſs between, and pour water upon it, ſo as to ſoak through it will make a harder ice in the veſſel, and leſs apt to diſſolve than ordinary. Bacon.
Rain ſoaking into the ſtrata, which lie near the ſurface, bears with it all ſuch moveable matter as occurs. Woodward.
3. To drink gluttonouſly and intemperately. This is a low term.
Let a drunkard ſee that his health decays, his eſtate waſtes, yet the habitual thirſt after his cups drives him to the tavern, though he has in his view the loſs of health and plenty; the leaſt of which he confeſſes is far greater than the breaking of his palace with a glaſs of wine, or the idle chat of a ſoaking club. Locke.

To Soak v. a.

1. To macerate in any moisture, to steep; to keep wet till moisture is imbibed; to drench.

Many of our princes
Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood
So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs
In blood of princes. Shakespeare's Hen. V.

Their land shall be soaked with blood Isa. xxxiv. 7

There deep Galesus soaks the yellow sands. Dryden.

Thou whose life's a dream of lazy pleasure!
'Tis all thy business, business how to shun
To bask thy naked body in the sun;
Supping thy stiffen'd joints with fragrant oil,
Then in thy spacious garden walk a while,
To suck the moisture up and soak it in. Dryden

Wormwood, put into the brine you soak your corn in, prevents the birds eating it. Mortimer.

2. To drain; to exhaust. This seems to be a cant term.

Plants that draw much nourishment from the earth, and soak and exhaust it, hurt all things that grow by them Bacon

A greater sparer than a saver, for though he had such means to accumulate, yet his forts, and his garrisons, and his seafarings, wherein he was only sumptuous, could not but soak his exchequer. Hist. on.

Soap n. s. [sape, Saxon; sape, Latin.] A substance used in washing, made of a lixivium of vegetable alkaline ashes and any unctuous substance

With clang despis'd the ground. Milton.

2. To mount intellectually; to tower with the mind.

'Tis but a base ignobie mind
That mounts no higher than a bird can soar. Shakespeare.
How high a pitch his resolution soars. Shakespeare.
Valour soars above
What the world calls misfortune and afflictions. Addison

3. To rise high.

Who aspires must down as low
As high he soar'd. Milton.
Flames rise and sink by fits; at last they soar
In one bright blaze, and then descend no more Dryden.
When swallows fleet soar high, and sport in air,
He told us that the welkin would be clear Gay.

Soar. n. s. [from the verb.] Towering flight.

Within soar
Of tow'ring eagles, to all the fowls he seems
A phœnix. Milton.

To Sob v. n. [seob, geab, complaining, Saxon. Perhaps it is a mere onomatopœia copied from the sound.] To heave and sigh with convulsive sorrow; to sigh with convulsion.

When thy warlike father, like a child,
Told the sad story of my father's death,
Me twenty times made pause to sob and weep. Shakespeare.
As if her life and death lay on his saying.
Some tears she shed, with sighs and sobbings mixt,
As if her hopes were dead through his delaying. Fairfax.
She sigh'd, she sob'd, and furious with despair,
She rent her garments, and she tore her hair. Dryden.
When children have not the power to obtain their desire, they will, by their clamour and sobbing, maintain their title to it. Locke on Education

He sobbing sees
The glades, unfolding to the golden day. Thomson.

Sob. n. s. [from the verb.] A convulsive sigh, a convulsive act of respiration obstructed by sorrow

Break heart, or choak with sobs my hated breath;
Do thy own work, admit no foreign death. Dryden.

The short thick sob, loud scream, and shrieks equal. Swift

A wond'rous bag with both her hands she bore
There she collects the force of female lungs,
Sighs, sobs, and passions, and the war of tongues. Pope

To Sob. v. a. To soak. A cant word.

The tree being sobbed and wet, swells. Mortimer.

Sober. adj. [sobrius, Latin, sobre, French.]

1. Temperate, particularly in liquours; not drunken

Live a sober, righteous, and godly life. Common Prayer

The vines give wine to the drunkard as well as to the sober man. Taylor's Holy Living

Sobriety in our riper years is the effect of a well concocted warmth, but where the principles are only phlegm what can be expected but an insipid manhood, and stupid old infancy? Dryden.

Sometimes Ovid appears too gay, there is a secret grace of youth which accompanies his writings, though the flowerets and sobriety of age be wanting. Dryden.

6. Seriousness; gravity.

Mirth makes them not mad;
Nor sobriety sad. Denham.

SO'CCAGE. n. f. [soc, French, a ploughshare; soccagium, barbarous Latin.] In law, is a tenure of lands for certain inferiour or husbandly services to be performed to the lord of the fee. All services due for land being knight's service, or socage; so that whatever is not knight's service, is socage. This socage is of three kinds; a socage of free tenure, where a man holdeth by free service of twelve pence a-year for all manner of services. Socage of ancient tenure is of land of ancient demesne, where no writ original shall be sued, but the writ secundum consuetudinem manerii. Socage of base tenure is where those that hold it may have none other writ but the monstraverunt, and such sockmen hold not by certain service. Cowel.

The lands are not holden at all of her majesty, or not holden in chief, but by a mean tenure in socage, or by knight's service. Bacon.

SO'CIABLE. adj. [sociable, French; sociabilis, Latin.]

1. Fit to be conjoined.

Another law toucheth them as they are sociable parts united into one body, a law which bindeth them each to serve unto other's good, and all to prefer the good of the whole before whatsoever their own particular. Hooker.

2. Ready to unite in a general interest.

To make man mild, and sociable to man;
To cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline. Addison's Cato.

3. Friendly; familiar; conversible.

Them thus employ'd, beheld
With pity heav'n's high King, and to him call'd
Raphael, the sociable spirit, that deign'd
To travel with Tobias. Milton.

4. Inclin'd to company.

In children much solitude and silence I like not, nor any thing born before his time, as this must needs be in that sociable and exposed age. Wotton.

[illegible]

1. Inclination to company and converse.

Such as would call her friendship love, and feign
To sociableness a name profane Donne.

The two main properties of man are contemplation and sociableness, or love of converse. More.

2. Freedom of conversation; good fellowship.

He always used courtesy and modesty, disliked of none; sometimes sociableness and fellowship well lik'd by many Hayw.

SO'CIABLY. adv. [from sociable.] Conversibly; as a companion.

Yet not terrible,
That I should fear, nor sociably mild,
As Raphael, that I should much confuse;
But solemn and sublime. Milton's Paradise Lost

SO'CIAL. adj. [socialis, Latin.]

1. Relating to a general or publick interest; relating to society.

To love our neighbour as ourselves is such a fundamental truth for regulating human society, that by that alone one might determine all the cases in social morality. Locke

2. Easy to mix in friendly gaiety; companionable.

Where'er adieu! yet not with thee remove
Thy martial spirit or thy social love. Pope.

3. Consisting in union or converse with another.

Thou in thy secrecy although alone,
Best with thy self accompany'd, seek'st not [illegible] common care on. Milton.

SO'CIALNESS. [from social.] The quality of being social.

SOCIETY. n. f. [société, French, societas, Latin.]

1. Union of many in one general interest.

[illegible]ers united in one interest; community.

As the practice of piety and virtue is agreeable to our reason, so is it for the interest of private persons and public so-
Tillotson

2. Company, converse.

To make society
The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself
Till supper time alone. Shakspeare's [illegible]

Wh. I was big in clamour, came there a man,
Who having seen me in my worser state,
Shunn'd my abhorr'd society. Shakspeare's K. Lear.

Solitude sometimes is best society,
And short retirement urges sweet return. Milton.

4. Partnership; union on equal terms.

Among unequals what society can sort? Milton.
Heav'n's greatness no society can bear;
Servants he made, and those thou want'st not here. Dryden.

SOCK. n. f. [soccus, Latin; soc, Saxon; sok, Dutch.]

1. Something put between the foot and shoe.

Ere I lead this life long, I'll sow nether socks, and mend them, and foot them too. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

A physician, that would be mystical, prescribeth for the rheum to walk continually upon a camomile alley, meaning he should put camomile within his socks. Bacon

2. The shoe of the ancient comick actors, taken in poems for comedy, and opposed to buskin or tragedy.

Then to the well trod stage anon,
If Johnson's learned sock be on,
Or sweetest Shakespeare, fancy's child,
Warble his native wood-notes wild. Milton.

Great Fletcher never treads in buskins here,
Nor greater Johnson dares in socks appear,
But gentle Shade in just reception finds
Amidst the monument of vanish'd minds. Dryden

On two figures of actors in the villa Mathei at Rome, we see the fashion of the old sock and larva. Addison.

SOCKET. n. f. [fouchette, French.]

1. Any hollow pipe, generally the hollow of a candlestick.

Two goodly beacons set in watches stead,
Therein gave light, and flam'd continually,
For they of living fire most subtly
Were made, and set in silver sockets bright. Fairy Queen.

She at your flames would soon take fire,
And like a candle in the socket
Dissolve Hall

The nightly virgin sees
When sparkling lamps their sputt'ring light advance,
And in the sockets oily bubbles dance. Dryden.

The stars amaz'd ran backward from the light,
And, shrunk within their sockets, lost their light. Dryden.

Two dire comets
In their own plague, and fire have breath'd their last,
Or dimly in their sinking sockets frown. Dryden.

To nurse up the vital flame as long as the matter will last, is not always good husbandry; it is much better to cover it with an extinguisher of honour, than let it consume till it burns blue, and lies agonizing within the socket, and at length goes out in no perfume. Collier.

2. The receptacle of the eye.

His eye-balls in their hollow socket sink;
Bereft of sleep he loaths his meat and drink,
He withers at his heart, and looks as wan
As the pale spectre of a murder'd man Dryden.

3. Any hollow that receives something inserted.

The sockets and supporters of flowers are figured; as in the five brethren of the rose, and sockets of gillyflowers. Bacon.

Gomphosis is the connection of a tooth to its socket. Hale.

As the weight leans wholly upon the axis, the grating and rubbing of these axes against the sockets wherein they are placed, will cause some aptitude and residency to that rotation of the cylinder which would otherwise ensue. Wilkins

On either side the head produce an ear,
And sink a socket for the flaming share. Dryden.

SOCKETCHISEL. n. f.

Carpenters, for their rougher work, use a stronger sort of chisels, and distinguish them by the name of socketchisels; their shank made with a hollow socket at top, to receive a strong wooden sprig made to fit into the socket. Moxon.

SOCLE. n. f. [With architects.] A flat square member, under the bases of pedestals of statues and vases. It serves as a foot or stand. Bailey.

Or you could ne'er ſuſpect my loyal love. Dryden.

SO'FA. n. ſ. [I believe an eaſtern word.] A ſplended ſeat covered with carpets.

The king leaped off from the ſofa on which he ſat, and cried out, 'tis my Abdallah! Guardian.

SOFT. adj. [ſope, Saxon; ſaft, Dutch.]

1. Not hard.

Hard and ſoft are names we give things, only in relation to the conſtitutions of our own bodies; that being called hard, which will put us to pain ſooner than change figure, by the preſſure of any part of our bodies; and that ſoft, which changes the ſituation of its parts upon an eaſy touch. Locke.

Some bodies are hard, and ſome ſoft: the hardneſs is cauſed by the groſſneſs of the ſpirits, which if a greater degree, make them not only hard, but frigid. Bacon.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt,
And ſoft with hard, and light with heavy mixt. Dryden.

2. Not rugged; not rough.

What went ye out for to ſee? a man clothed in ſoft raiment? behold, they that wear ſoft raiment are in kings houſes. Matth.

And uncompounded is their eſſence pure. Milton.

4. Facile; flexible, not reſolute, yielding.

A few divines of ſo ſoft and ſervile tempers as diſpoſed them to ſo ſudden acting and compliance. K. Charles.

One king is too ſoft and eaſy, another too fiery. L'Eſtrange.

5. Tender; timorous.

What he hath done famouſly, he did it to that end; tho' ſoft conſcienced men can be content to ſay, it was for his country. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

However ſoft within themſelves they are,
To you they will be valiant by deſpair. Dryden.

Curſt be the verſe, how well ſoe'er it flow,
That tends to make one worthy man my foe;
Give virtue ſcandal, innocence a fear,
Or from the ſoft ey'd virgin ſteal a tear. Pope.

6. Mild; kind; gentle; civil.

Would my heart were flint like Edward's,
Or Edward's ſoft and pitiful like mine. Shakeſpeare.

If I ſoil
Myſelf with ſin, I then but vainly toil. Sandys.
I would not ſoil theſe pure ambroſial weeds,
With the rank vapours of this ſin-worn mould. Milton.
Bad fruit of knowledge, if this be to know,
Which leaves us naked thus, of honour void,
Of innocence, of faith, of purity,
Our wonted ornaments now ſoil'd and ſtain'd. Milton.
One who couldn't for a taſte o' th' fleſh come on,
Licks the ſoil'd earth,
While reeking with a mangled Ombit's blood. Tate.
If the eye-glaſs be tinctled faintly with the ſmoke of a lamp or torch to obſcure the light of the ſtar, the fainter light in the circumference of the ſtar ceaſes to be viſible, and the ſtar, if the glaſs be ſufficiently ſoiled with ſmoke, appears ſomething more like a mathematical point. Newton.
An abſent hero's bed they ſought to ſoil,
An abſent hero's wealth they made their ſpoil. Pope.

2. To dung, to manure
Men now preſent, juſt as they ſoil their ground, not that they love the dirt, but that they expect a crop. South.

SOIL. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1 Dirt; ſpot; polution; foulneſs.
By indirect ways
I met this crown; and I myſelf know well
How troubleſome it ſate upon my head
To thee it ſhall deſcend with better quiet;
For all the ſoil of the atchievement goes
With me into the earth. Shakeſpeare's Henry IV
That would be a great ſoil in the new gloſs of your marriage. Shakeſpeare.
Vexed I am with paſſions,
Which give ſome ſoil perhaps to my behaviour Shakeſpeare.

As clouds, and clouds may rain, and rain produce
Fruits in her ſoften'd ſoil. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt
The firſt cauſe of a kingdom's thriving is the fruitfulneſs of the ſoil, to produce the neceſſaries and conveniencies of life, not only for the inhabitants, but for exportation. Swift.

3. Land, country
Dorſet, that with a fearful ſoul
Leads diſcontented ſteps in foreign ſoil,

Thus far advance ſhall call home
To high promotions.
O unexpected ſtroke, worſe than of death!
Muſt I thus leave thee, paradiſe? thus leave
Thee, native ſoil! theſe happy walks and ſhades;
Fit haunts of gods. Milton

4. Dung, compoſt
The haven has been ſtopped up by the great heaps of dirt that the ſea has thrown into it; for all the ſoil on that ſide of Ravenna has been left there inſenſibly by the ſea. Addiſ.

One poor and loving child,
But one thing to rejoice and ſolace in,
And cruel death hath catch'd it from my ſight. Shakeſpeare.
Were they to be rul'd, and not to rule,
This ſickly land might ſolace as before. Shakeſp. R. III.

SO'LACE. n. ſ. [ſolatium, Latin. Comfort; pleaſure; alleviation, that which gives comfort or pleaſure; recreation, amuſement.
If we have that which is meet and right, although they be glad, we are not to envy them this their ſolace; we do not think it a duty of ours to be in every ſuch thing their tormentors. Hooker.
Therein ſat a lady freſh and fair,
Making ſweet ſolace to herſelf alone;
Sometimes ſhe ſung as loud as lark in air,
Sometimes ſhe laugh'd, that nigh her breath was gone. Fa.
Great joy he promis'd to his thoughts, and new Solace in her return. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.
If I would delight my private hours
With muſick or with poem, where ſo ſoon
As in our native language can I find
That ſolace? Milton's Paradiſe Regain'd.

Though fight be loft,
Life yet hath many folaces, enjoy'd
[illegible]
At home in leiſure and domeſtick eaſe,
Exempt from many a care and chance, to which Eye-ſight expoſes daily men abroad Milton's Agoniſtes.
Through waters, and through flames I'll go,
Suff'rer and ſolace of thy woe. Prior.

Sr[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [

A rattling tempeſt through the branches went,
That ſtr pp'd them bare, and one ſole way they rent. Dryd.
He, ſ l n power, at the beginning ſaid,
Let ſea r ar, and earth and heav'n be mad.
A id it w s ſo; and when he ſhall ordain
In other ſort, has but to ſpeak again,
And they ſhall be no more. Prior.

3. Black; dark; dusky.

All the grisly legions that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron,
Harpies and hydras and all monstrous forms. Milton.

Swift on his sooty pinions flits the gnome,
And in a vapour reach'd the gloomy dome. Pope.

SOP. n. f. [sop, Saxon; sopa, Spanish; soppe, Dutch.]

1. Any thing steeped in liquor.

The bounded waters
Would lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a sop of all this solid globe. Shakespeare.

Draw, you rogue; for though it be night, yet the moon shines: I'll make a sop o'th' moonshine of you. Shakespeare.

Sops in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriate more than wine of itself. Bacon's Natural History.

The prudent Sibyl had before prepar'd
A sop, in honey steep'd, to charm the guard,
Which mix'd with powerful drugs, she cast before
His greedy grinning jaws, just op'd to roar. Dryden.

Ill nature is not to be cured with a sop; but quarrelsome men, as well as quarrelsome curs, are worse for fair usage. L'Estrange.

2. Any thing given to pacify, from the sop given to Cerberus.

To Cerberus they give a sop,
His tripple barking mouth to stop. Swift.

To SOP. v. a. To steep in liquour.

SO'PHIST. n. f. [sophista, Latin.] A professor of philosophy.

The court of Croesus is said to have been much resorted by the sophists of Greece in the happy beginning of his reign. Temple.

SO'PHISTER. n. f. [sophiste, French; sophista, Latin.]

1. A disputant fallaciously subtle; an artful but insidious logician.

A subtle traitor needs no sophister. Shakespeare's Hen. VI.

If a heathen philosopher bring arguments from reason, which none of our atheistical sophisters can confute, for the immortality of the soul, I hope they will so weigh the consequences, as neither to talk, nor live, as if there was no such thing. Denham.

Not all the subtle objections of sophisters and rabbies, against the gospel, so much prejudiced the reception of it, as the reproach of those crimes with which they aspersed the assemblies of christians. Rogers's Sermons.

2. A professor of philosophy; a sophist. This sense is antiquated.

Alcidimus the sophister hath many arguments to prove, that voluntary and extemporal far excelleth premeditated speech. Hooker.

SOPHI'STICAL. adj. [sophistique, Fr. from sophist.] Fallaciously subtle; logically deceitful.

Neither know I whether I should prefer for madness, and sophistical couzenage, that the same body of Christ should be in a thousand places at once of this sublunary world. Hall.

When the state of the controversy is well understood, the difficulty will not be great in giving answers to all his sophistical cavils. Stillingfleet

That may seem a demonstration for the present, which to posterity will appear a more sophistical knot. More.

SOPHI'STICALLY. adv. [from sophistical.] With fallacious subtilty.

Bolingbroke argues most sophistically. Swift.

To SOPHI'STICATE. v. a. [sophistiquer, Fr. from sophist.] To adulterate; to corrupt with something spurious.

If the passions of the mind be strong, they easily sophisticate the understandings, they make it apt to believe upon every slender warrant, and to imagine infallible truth, where scarce any probable shew appeareth. Hooker.

Here's three of us are sophisticated. Shakespeare.

Divers experiments succeeded not, because they were at one time tried with genuine materials, and at another time with sophisticated ones. Boyle.

The only persons amongst the heathens, who sophisticate nature and philosophy, were the Stoicks, who affirm moral, unchangeable concatenation of causes, reaching even to the contracts of man's will. South's Sermons.

Yet the rich cozens may their boasting spare;
They purchase but sophisticated ware:
'Tis prodigality that buys deceit,
Where both the giver and the taker cheat.

The eye hath its coats and humours [illegible] lest, lest it should tinge and sophisticate the light that it lets in by a natural jaundice. Boyle.

SOPHI'STICATE. part. adj. [from the verb.] Adulterate; not genuine.

Since then a great part of our scientifical [illegible] likely to be adulterate, though all bears the image and superscription of truth; the only way to know what is sophisticate and what is not so, is to bring all to the examen of the touchstone. Granville.

So truth, when only one supply'd the state,
Grew scarce and dear, and yet sophisticate. Dryden.

SOPHISTICA'TION. n. f. [sophistication, Fr. from sophisticate.] Adulteration; not genuineness.

Sophistication is the act of counterfeiting or adulterating any thing with what is not so, good, for the sake of unlawful gain. Quincy.

The drugs and simples sold in shops, generally are adulterated by the fraudulent avarice of the sellers, especially if the preciousness may make their sophistication very beneficial Boyle.

Besides easy submission to sophistications of sense, we have inability to prevent the miscarriages of our junior reasons. Glanv.

SOPHISTICA'TOR n. f. [from sophisticate] Adulterator, one that makes things not genuine.

SO'PHISTRY. n. f. [from sophist.] Fallacious ratiocination.

His sophistry prevailed; his father believed. Sidney.

These men have obscured and confounded the natures of things, by their false principles and wretched sophistry; tho' an act be never so lawful, they will strip it of its guilt. South.

To SOPORATE. v. n. [sopare, Latin.] To lay asleep. Dict.

SOPORI'FEROUS. adj. [sopor and fero.] Productive of sleep; causing sleep; narcotick; opiate; dormitive, somniferous; anodyne; sleepy.

The particular ingredients of those magical ointments are opiate and soporiferous; for anointing of the forehead, neck, feet, and back-bone, procures dead sleeps. Bacon.

While the whole operation was performing, I lay in a profound sleep, by the force of that soporiferous medicine infused into my liquor Gulliver's Travels.

SOPORI'FEROUSNESS. n. f. [from soporiferous.] The quality of causing sleep.

SOPORI'FICK. adj. [sopor and facio.] Causing sleep; opiate; narcotick.

The colour and taste of opium are, as well as its soporifick or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities. Locke.

SO'PPLE. adj. [from sorbeo, Latin.] What may be drunk or sipped.

SORBI'TION. n. f. [sorbitio, Latin.] The act of drinking or sipping.

SORBS. n. f. [sorbum, Lat.] The berries of the sorb or service-tree.

SO'RCERER. n. f. [sorcier, French; sortiarius, low Latin.] A conjurer; an enchanter; a magician.

They say this town is full of cozenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Drug-working sorcerers that change the mind,
Soul-killing witches that deform the body,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shakespeare.

The weakness of the power of witches upon kings and magistrates may be ascribed to the weakness of imagination; for it is hard for a witch or a sorcerer to put on a belief that they can hurt such. Bacon's Natural History.

He saw a subtle sorcerer arise,
All sudden gorgon's hiss and dragon's glare,
And ten horn'd fiends. Pope.

The Egyptian sorcerers contended with Moses, but the wonders which Moses wrought did so far transcend the power of magicians, as made them confess it was the finger of God. Watts's Logick.

SORCERESS

SO'RCERESS. n. f. [Female of sorcerer.] A female magician; an enchantress.

Bring forth that sorceress condemn'd to burn Shakesp.

Divers witches and sorceresses have fed upon man's flesh, to aid their imagination with high and foul vapours. Bacon.

The snaky sorceress that sat
Just by hell-gate, and kept the fatal key,
Ris'n, and with hideous outcry rush'd between. Milton.

How cunningly the sorceress displays
Her own transgressions, to upbraid me, mine. Milton.

SO'RCERY. n. f. Magick; enchantment; conjuration; witchcraft, charms.

This witch Sycorax,
For mischiefs manifold, and sorceries terrible,
Was banish'd. Shakespeare.

Adders wisdom I have learn'd
To fence my ear against thy sorceries. Milton.

Actæon has long tracts of rich soil; but had the misfortune in his youth to fall under the power of sorcery. Tatler.

SORD. n. f. [from sward.] Turf; grassy ground.

This is the prettiest low-born lass that ever ran on the green sord Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

An altar of grassy sord. Milton.

The sea washes off the soil and sordes wherein mineral mosses were involved and concealed, and thereby renders them more conspicuous. Woodward

SO'RDET. } n. f. sourdine, French, sordina, Italian.] A small
SO'RDINE. } pipe put into the mouth of a trumpet to make it sound lower or shriller. Bailey.

SO'RDID. adj. [sordidus, Latin.]

1. Foul, gross, filthy; dirty.

There Charon stands
A sordid god, down from his hoary chin
A length of beard descends, uncomb'd, unclean. Dryden.

2. [Sordide, French.] Intellectually dirty; mean; vile; base.

It is strange since the priests office heretofore was always splendid, that it is now looked upon as a piece of religion, to make it low and sordid. South's Sermons.

3. [Sordide, French.] Covetous; niggardly.

He may be old,
And yet not sordid, who refuses gold. Denham.

If one should cease to be generous and charitable, because another is sordid and ungrateful, it would be much in the power of vice to extinguish christian virtues. L'Estrange.

SO'RDIDLY. adv. [from sordid.] Meanly; poorly; covetously;

SO'RDIDNESS. n. f. [from sordid.]

1. Meanness; baseness.

I omit the madnesses of Caligula's delights, and the execrable sordidness of those of Tiberius. Cowley

2. Nastiness; not neatness.

Providence deters people from sluttishness and sordidness, and provokes them to cleanliness. Ray.

SORE. n. f. [ran, Saxon; saur, Danish.] A place tender and painful; a place excoriated; an ulcer. It is not used of a wound, but of a breach of continuity, either long continued or from internal cause: to be a sore, there must be an excoriation; a tumour or bruise is not called a sore before some disruption happen.

Let us hence provide
A salve for any sore that may betide. Shakespeare's Hen. VI.

It is a bad exchange to wound a man's own conscience, to salve state sores. King Charles.

Receipts abound; but searching all thy store,
The best is still at hand to launce the sore,
And cut the head; for till the core be found
The secret vice is fed and gathers ground. Dryden.

By these all festring sores her councils heal,
Which time or has disclos'd, or shall reveal. Dryden.

Lice and flies, which have a most wonderful instinct to find out convenient places for the hatching and nourishment of their young, lay their eggs upon sores. Bentley.

SORE. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Tender to the touch.

We can ne'er be sure,
Whether we pain or not endure;
And just so far are sore and griev'd,
As by the fancy is believ'd. Hudibras.

While sore of battle, while our wounds are green,
Why should we tempt the doubtful dye again. Dryden.

It was a right answer of the physician to his patient, that had sore eyes, if you have more pleasure in the taste of wine than in the use of your sight, wine is good; but if the pleasure of seeing be greater to you than that of drinking, wine is naught. Locke.

2. Tender in the mind; easily vexed.

Malice and hatred are very fretting and vexatious, and apt to make our minds sore and uneasy; but he that can moderate these affections will find ease in his mind. Tillotson.

Laugh at your friends, and if your friends are sore,
So much the better, you may laugh the more. Pope.

3. Violent with pain; afflictively vehement. See SORE. adverb.

Threescore and ten I can remember well,
Within the volume of which time I've seen
Hours dreadful, and things strange, but this sore night
Hath trifled former knowings. Shakespeare.

I will persevere in my course of loyalty, though the conflict be sore between that and my blood. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

My loins are filled with a sore disease; and there is no whole part in my body. Common Prayer.

Sore hath been their fight,
As likeliest was, when two such foes met arm'd. Milton.

Gentle lady, may thy grave
Peace and quiet ever have,
After this day's travel sore
Sweet rest seize thee evermore Milton.

They are determin'd to live up to the holy rule, though sore evils and great temporal inconveniencies should attend the discharge of their duty. Decay of Piety

4. Comma. Out of use.

To lapse in fullness
Is sorer than to lie for need, and falsehood
Is worse in kings than beggars. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

5. [From sour, free.]

The buck is called the first year a fawn; the second, a pricket, the third, a sorel; and the fourth year, a sore. Shak.

SORE. adv. [This the etymologists derive from seer, Dutch; but seer means only an intenseness of any thing; sore almost always includes pain.] With painful or dangerous vehemence; a very painful degree; with afflictive violence or pertinacity. It is now little used

Thine arrows stick fast in me, and thy hand presseth me sore. Common Prayer.

The knight, then lightly leaping to the prey,
With mortal steel him smote again so sore,
That headless his unwieldy body lay. Fairy Queen.

He this and that, and each man's blow
Doth eye, defend, and shift, being laid so sore. Daniel.

Though iron hew and mangle sore,
Would wounds and bruises honour more. Hudibras.

Distrust shook sore their minds. Milton.

So that Palamon were wounded sore,
Arcite was hurt as much. Dryden's Knights Tale.

Sore-sigh'd the knight, who this long sermon heard
At length, considering all, his heart he cheer'd. Dryden.

How, Didius, shall a Roman sore repuls'd
Greet your arrival to this distant isle?
How bid you welcome to these shatter'd legions? A. Philips.

SO'REHON. } n. f. [Irish and Scottish.] A kind of arbitrary
SORN. } exaction or service tenure, formerly in Scotland, as likewise in Ireland; whenever a chieftan had a mind to revel, he came down among the tenants with his followers, by way of contempt called in the lowlands gillwhites, and lived on free quarters; so that ever since, when a person obtrudes himself upon another, stays at his house, and hangs upon him for bed and board, he is said to sorn, or be a sorner Macbean.

They exact upon them all kind of services; yea, and the very wild exactions, cuagne, livery, and sorehon; by which they poll and utterly undo the poor tenants and freeholders under them. Spenser's Ireland

SO'REL. n. f. [Diminutive of sore.]

The buck is called the first year a fawn; the second, a pricket; the third, a sorel. Shakespeare.

SO'RELY. adv. [from sore.]

Here's the smell of the blood still; all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand. Oh! oh! oh!—What a sigh is there? the heart is sorely overcharged. Shakespeare.

The warrior train,
Though most were sorely wounded, none were slain. Dryden.

2. With vehemence dangerous or afflictive.

I have done ill,
Of which I do accuse myself so sorely,
That I will enjoy no more. Shakespeare

SO'RENESS. n. f. [from sore.] Tenderness of a hurt.

He that, whilst the soreness of his late pangs of conscience remains, finds himself a little indisposed for sin, presently concludes repentance hath had its perfect work. Decay of Piety

My foot began to swell, and the pain and soreness it left such a soreness, that I could hardly suffer the cloaths of my bed. Temple

SORITES. n. f. [σωρείτης.] Properly an heap. An argument where one proposition is accumulated on another

Chrysippus the Stoick invented a kind of argument, consisting of more than three propositions, which is called sorites, or a heap. Dryden.

Sorites is when several middle terms are chosen to connect one another successively in several propositions, till the last proposition connects its predicate with the first subject. Thus, all men of revenge have their souls often uneasy, uneasy souls are a plague to themselves; now to be one's own plague is folly in the extreme. Watts's Logick.

SORO'RICIDE. n. f. [soror and cædo.] The murder of a ſiſter.

SORRANCE. n. f. [In farriery.] Any diſeaſe or ſore in horſes. Ainſ.

SO'REL. n. f. [rupe, Saxon; ſorel, French.] This plant agrees with the dock in all its characters, and only differs in having an acid taſte. Miller.

Of all roots of herbs the root of ſorrel goeth the fartheſt into the earth. It is a cold and acid herb that loveth the earth, and is not much drawn by the ſun. Bacon.

Acid auſtere vegetables contract and ſtrengthen the fibres, as all kinds of ſorrel, the virtues of which lie in acid aſtringent ſalt, a ſovereign antidote againſt the putrefcent bilious alkali.

SORRILY. adv. [from ſorry.] Meanly; poorly, deſpicably; wretchedly.

Thy pipe, O Pan, ſhall help though I ſing ſorrily. Sidney.

SO'RRINESS. n. f. [from ſorry.] Meanneſs, wretchedneſs; paltableneſs; deſpicableneſs.

SO'RROW. n. f. [ſorg, Daniſh.] Grief; pain for ſomething paſt; ſadneſs, mourning. Sorrow is not commonly underſtood as the effect of preſent evil, but of loſt good.

Sorrow is uneaſineſs in the mind, upon the thought of a good loſt, which might have been enjoyed longer, or the ſenſe of a preſent evil. Locke.

Sorrow on thee, and all the pack of you,
That triumph thus upon my miſery! Shakeſpeare.

A world of woe and ſorrow. Milton.

Some other hour I will to tears allow;
But having you, can ſhow no ſorrow now. Dryden.

To SO'RROW. v. n. [ſaurran, Gothick; ſorgian, Sax.] To grieve, to be ſad; to be dejected.

Thy mortable change, now at my end,
Lament, not ſorrow at. Shakſp. Antony and Cleopatra.

Where ever ſorrow is relief would be,
If you do ſorrow at my grief in love,
By giving love, your ſorrow and my grief
Were both extermin'd. Shakeſpeare.

Now I rejoice, not that ye were made ſorry, but that ye ſorrowed to repentance. 2 Cor. vii. 9.

I neither fear to die nor deſire to live; and having maſtered all grief in myſelf, I deſire no man to ſorrow for me. Hayw.

Send them forth, though ſorrowing, yet in peace. Addiſon.

Said the prince encourages
The neighb'ring main, and ſorrowing treads the ſhores. Pope.

SO'RROWED. adj. [from ſorrow.] Accompanied with ſorrow. Out of uſe.

Now the publick body, which doth ſeldom
Play the recanter, feeling in itſelf
A lack of Timon's aid, hath ſenſe withal
Of its own fall, reſtraining aid to Timon;
And ſends forth us to make their ſorrowed tender. Shakeſp.

SO'RROWFUL. adj. [ſorrow and full.]

1. Sad for ſomething paſt, mournful, grieving.

Bleſſed are they which have been ſorrowful for all thy ſcourges, for they ſhall rejoice for thee, when they have ſeen all thy glory. Tob. xiii. 14.

2. Deeply ſerious. Not in uſe.

Hannah ſaid, no, my lord, I am a woman of a ſorrowful ſpirit: I have poured out my ſoul before the Lord. 1 Sam.

3. Expreſſing grief; accompanied with grief.

The things that my ſoul refuſed to touch are as my ſorrowful meat. Job, vi. 7.

SO'RRY. adj. [rapig, Saxon.]

1. Grieved for ſomething paſt. It is generally uſed of ſlight or caſual miſcarriages or vexations, but ſometimes of greater things. It does not imply any long continuance of grief.

I am ſorry for thee, friend; 'tis the duke's pleaſure. Shak.

We are ſorry for the ſatire interſperſed in ſome of theſe pieces, upon a few people, from whom the higheſt provocations have been received. Swift.

2. [From four, filth, Iſland ick.] Vile, worthleſs, vexatious.

A ſalt and ſorry rheum offends me:
Lend me thy handkerchief. Shakſpeare's Othello.

How now, why do you keep alone?
Of ſorrieſt fancies your companions making,
Using thoſe thoughts, which ſhould, indeed, have died
With them they think on. Shakſpeare's Macbeth.

If the union of the parts conſiſt only in reſt, it would ſeem that a bag of duſt would be of as firm a conſiſtence as that of marble, and Bajazet's cage had been but a ſorry priſon. Glanv.

Coarſe complexions,
And cheeks of ſorry grain will ſerve to ply
The ſampler, and to teaze the houſewife's wool. Milton.

How vain were all the enſigns of his power, that could not terrify into a moment one ſlighting look of a ſorry ſlave! L'Eſt.

If one innocent had any relation to his Thebais, the poet might have found ſome ſorry excuſe for detaining the reader. Dryden.

If ſuch a ſlight and ſorry buſineſs as that could produce one organical body, one might reaſonably expect, that now and then a dead lump of dough might be leavened into an animal. Bentley's Sermons.

And of the loyal ſervice of his ſon,
When I inform'd him, then he call'd me ſot;
And told me I had turn'd the wrong ſide out. Shakeſpeare.
This by his tongue being made his miſtreſs' picture,
And then a mind put in't, either our brags
Were crackt of kitchen trulls, or his deſcription
Prov'd as ſpeaking ſots. Shakeſpeare.
Tell him that no hiſtory or antiquity can match his conduct; and preſently the ſot, becauſe he knows neither hiſtory nor antiquity, that begin to meaſure himſelf by himſelf, which is the only ſure way for him not to fall ſhort. South's Sermons.
2. A wretch ſtupified by drinking.
Every ſign
That calls the ſtaring ſots to naſty wine. Roſcommon.
A ſurly ill-bred lord,
That chides and ſnaps her up at every word
A brutal ſot; who while ſhe holds his head,
With drunken filth bedaubs the nuptial bed. Granville.

To SOT. v. a. To ſtupify; to beſot.
Pox on his loyalty!
I hate to ſee a brave bold fellow ſotted,
Made four and ſenſeleſs, turn'd to whey by love;
A driveling hero, fit for a romance. Dryden's Span. Friar.
The potion
Turns his brain and ſtupifies his mind;
The ſotted moon-calf gapes. Dryden.

To SOT v. n. To tipple to ſtupidity.

SO'TTISH. adj. [from ſot.]

2. Dull with intemperance.

SO'TTISHLY. adv. [from ſottiſh.] Stupidly; dully; ſenſeleſsly
Northumberland ſottiſhly mad with over great fortune, procured the King by his letters patent under the great ſeal, to appoint the lady Jane to ſucceed him in the inheritance of the crown. Hayward.
Atheiſm is impudent in pretending to philoſophy, and ſuperſtition ſottiſhly ignorant in fancying that the knowledge of nature tends to irreligion. Glanville.
So ſottiſhly to loſe the pureſt pleaſures and comforts of this world, and forego the expectation of immortality in another; and ſo deſperately to run the riſk of dwelling with everlaſting burnings, plainly diſcovers itſelf to be the moſt pernicious folly and deplorable madneſs in the world. Bentley.

SO'TTISHNESS. n. ſ. [from ſottiſh.] Dulneſs; ſtupidity; inſenſibility
Few conſider what a degree of ſottiſhneſs and confirmed ignorance men may ſin themſelves into. South's Sermons.
No ſober temperate perſon can look with any complacency upon the drunkenneſs and ſottiſhneſs of his neighbour. South.
The firſt part of the text, the folly and ſottiſhneſs of Atheiſm, will come home to their caſe; ſince they make ſuch a manifeſt preference to wit and ſagacity. Bentley's Sermons.

SO'VEREIGN adj. [ſouverain, French; ſoberano, Spaniſh.]
1. Supreme in power; having no ſuperiour
As teaching bringeth us to know that God is our ſupreme truth, ſo prayer teſtifieth that we acknowledge him our ſovereign good Hooker.
You, my ſovereign lord,
Cauſeleſs have laid diſgraces on my head. Shakeſp. Hen. IV.
None of us who now thy grace implore,
But held the rank of ſovereign queen before,
Till giddy chance, whoſe malice never bears
That mortal bliſs ſhould laſt for length of years,
Caſt us headlong from our high eſtate. Dryden.
Whether Eſau, then, were a vaſſal to Jacob, and Jacob his ſovereign prince by birth right, I leave the reader to judge. Locke.
2. Supremely efficacious.
A memorial of their fidelity and zeal, a ſovereign preſervative of God's people from the venomous infection of hereſy. Hooker.
The moſt ſovereign preſcription in Galen is but empirick; and to this preſervative of no better report than a horſe drench. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.
Love-wounded Proteus,
My boſom, as a bed,
Shall lodge thee, till thy wound be throughly heal'd,
And thus I ſearch it with a ſovereign kiſs. Shakeſpeare.
A water of cold water of parſnips by that we drink for, is made very ſovereign for health. Bacon.
Like the ſcum ſtarv'd men did draw
From parboil'd ſhoes and boots, and all the reſt
Which were with any ſovereign fatneſs bleſt. Donne.
Be cool, my friend, and hear my muſe diſpenſe
Some ſovereign comforts drawn from common ſenſe. Dryden.

SO'VEREIGN n. ſ. Supreme lord
O, let my ſovereign turn away his face,
And bid his ears a little while be deaf. Shakeſpeare.
By my ſovereign, and his fate, I ſwear,
Renown'd for faith in peace, for force in war,
Oft our alliance other lands deſir'd. Dryden.

SO'VEREIGNLY. adv. [from ſovereign.] Supremely; in the higheſt degree.
He was ſovereignly lovely in himſelf. Boyle.

SO'VEREIGNTY n. ſ. [ſouveraineté, French.] Supremacy; higheſt place; ſupreme power; higheſt degree of excellence.
Give me pardon,
That I, your vaſſal, have employed and pain'd
Your unknown ſovereignty. Shakeſpeare.
Happy were England, would this virtuous prince
Take on his grace the ſovereignty thereof. Shakeſpeare.
To give laws unto a people, to inſtitute magiſtrates and officers over them; to puniſh and pardon malefactors, to have the

the ſole authority of making war and peace, are the true marks of ſovereignty. Locke.

A mighty hunter thence he ſhall be ſtil'd
Before the Lord; as in defiance of heav'n,
Or from heav'n, claiming ſecond ſov'reignty. Milton.

Nothing does ſo gratify a haughty humour, as this piece of uſurped ſovereignty over our brethren. Govern. of the Tongue.

Jove's own tree,
That holds the woods in awful ſov'reignty,
Requires a depth of lodging in the ground;
High as its topmoſt boughs to heav'n aſcend,
So low his roots to hell's dominion tend. Dryden.

I well foreſee, whene'er thy ſuit I grant,
That I my much lov'd ſov'reignty ſhall want,
And her new beauty may thy heart invade. Dryden.

A plot upon her virtuous husband's life,
And the exchange my brother. Shak. King Lear.
This which yields or fills all space. Milton.
Pure space is capable neither of resistance nor motion. Locke.
Space and motion can never be actually infinite, they have a power only and a capacity of being increased without end; so that no space can be assigned so vast, but still a larger may be imagined; no motion so swift or languid, but a greater velocity or slowness may still be conceived Ashley.

2. Any quantity of place.
I would not be the villain that thou think'st
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich East to boot Shakesp. Macbeth.
There was but two ways to escape, the one through the woods about ten miles space to Walpo. Knolles.
In such a great ruin, where the fragments are great and hard, it is not possible they should be so adjusted in their fall, but that they would be hollow, and many unfilled spaces would be intercepted amongst them Burnet.
Measuring first with careful eyes
The space his spear could reach, aloud he cries. Dryden.

3. Quantity of time.
Nine times the space that measures day and night
To mortal men, he with his horrid crew
Lay vanquish'd, rolling in the fiery gulph,
Confounded, though immortal Milton.
In a lever the motion can be continued only for so short a space, as may be answerable to that little distance betwixt the fulcrument and the weight Wilkins's Math. Mag.
God may defer his judgments for a time, and give a people a longer space of repentance: he may stay 'till the iniquities of a nation be full; but sooner or later they have reason to expect his vengeance Tillotson's Sermons.
The lives of great men cannot be writ with any tolerable degree of elegance or exactness, within a short space after their decease Addison's Freeholder

2. A prodigal; a laviſher

Biſhop Morton told the commiſſioners, who were to levy the benevolence, if they met with any that were ſparing, tell them that they muſt needs have, becauſe they laid up; and if they were ſpenders, they muſt needs have, becauſe it was ſeen in their port and manner of living. Bacon's Henry VII.

SPE'NDTHRIFT. n. ſ. [ſpend and thrift] A prodigal; a laviſher.

Bitter cold weather ſtarved both the bird and the ſpend-thrift. L'Eſtrange.

Some fawning uſurer does feed
With preſent ſums th' unwary ſpendthrift's need. Dryden.

Moſt men, like ſpendthrift heirs, judge a little in hand better than a great deal to come. Locke.

The ſon, bred in ſloth, becomes a ſpendthrift, a proſligate, and goes out of the world a beggar. Swift.

SPE'RABLE. adj. [ſperabilis, Lat.] Such as may be hoped.

We may caſt it away, if it be found but a bladder, and diſcharge it of ſo much as is vain and not ſperable. Bacon.

SPERM. n. ſ. [ſperme, Fr. ſperma, Lat.] Seed; that by which the ſpecies is continued.

Some creatures bring forth many young ones at a burthen, and ſome but one: this may be cauſed by the quantity of ſperm required, or by the partitions of the womb which may ſever the ſperm. Bacon.

There is required to the preparation of the ſperm of animals a great apparatus of veſſels, many ſecretions, concoctions, reflections, and circulations. Ray.

SPE'RMACETI. n. ſ. [Latin.] Corruptedly pronounced [illegible]

[illegible] of which all the [illegible] is [illegible] and that is very improperly called ſperma, becauſe it is [illegible] It is changed from what it is naturally, the oil itſelf being very brown and rank. The peculiar property of it is to ſhoot into flakes, not much unlike the cryſtalliſation of ſalts; but in this ſtate 'tis yellow, and has a certain rankneſs, from which it is freed by ſqueezing it between warm metaline plates in a preſs, and afterwards expoſing the remainder to the open air: at length it becomes perfectly pure, inodorous, flaky, ſmooth, white, and in ſome meaſure tranſparent. Quincy.

SPERMA'TICAL. SPERMA'TICK. } adj. [ſpermatique, Fr. from ſperm.]

1. Seminal; conſiſting of ſeed.

The primordials of the world are not mechanical, but ſpermatical or vital. More's Divine Dialogues.

Metals and ſundry meteors rude ſhapes have no need of any particular principle of life, or ſpermatical form, diſtinct from the reſt or motion of the particles of the matter. More.

2. Belonging to the ſperm.

The moiſture of the body, which did before irrigate the parts, is drawn down to the ſpermatical veſſels. Bacon.

Two different ſexes muſt concur to their generation: there is in both a great apparatus of ſpermatick veſſels, wherein the more ſpirituous part of the blood is by many digeſtions and circulations exalted into ſperm. Ray on the Creation.

To SPE'RMATIZE. v. n. [from ſperm.] To yield ſeed.

Ariſtotle affirming that women do not ſpermatize, and conſer a receptacle rather than eſſential principles of generation, deductively excludes both ſexes in mankind. Brown.

SPERMATOCE'LE. n. ſ. [σπερμα and κηλη.] A rupture cauſed by the contraction of the ſeminal veſſels, and the ſemen falling into the ſcrotum. Barey.

SPERMO'LOGIST. n. ſ. [σπερμολόγος.] One who gathers or treats of ſeeds. Dict.

To SPE'RSE. v. a. [ſperſus, Latin.] To diſperſe; to ſcatter. A word not now in uſe.

1. To vomit, to eject from the ſtomach.

A ſwordfiſh ſmall him from the reſt did ſunder,
That in his throat him pricking ſoftly under
His wide abyſs, him forced forth to ſpew,
That all the ſea did roar like heaven's thunder,
And all the waves were ſtain'd with filthy hue. Spenſer.

2. To eject, to caſt forth.

When earth with ſlime and mud is cover'd o'er,
Or hollow places ſpew their wat'ry ſtore. Dryden's Georg.

When yellow ſands are ſifted from below,
The guſhing billows give a golden ſhow;
And when the fouler bottom ſpews the black,
The Stygian dye the tainted waters take. Dryden.

3. [illegible]

Keep my ſtatutes, and commit not any of theſe abominations, that the land ſpew not you out. Lev. xviii. 28.

Contentious ſuits ought to be ſpewed out, as the ſurfeit of courts. Bacon's Eſſays.

To SPEW. v. n. To vomit, to eaſe the ſtomach.

He could have hauld in
The drunkards, and the noiſes of the inn;
But better 'twas that they ſhould ſleep or ſpew,
Than in the ſcene to offend or him or you. Ben. Johnſon.

SPE'WY. adj. [from ſpew.] A provincial word.

The lower valies in wet Winters are ſo ſpewy, that they know not how to feed them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

1. A globe; an orbicular body; a body of which the center is at the ſame diſtance from every point of the circumference.

Forth the ſun, a mighty ſphere, he fram'd. Milton.

2. Any globe of the mundane ſyſtem.

What if within the moon's fair ſhining ſphere,
What if in every other ſtar unſeen,
Of other worlds he happily ſhould bear? Fairy Queen.

And then mortal ears
Had heard the muſick of the ſpheres. Dryden.

3. A globe repreſenting the earth or ſky.

[illegible]
Conon, and what's his name who made the ſphere,
And ſhew'd the ſeaſons of the fading year. Dryden.

4. Orb; circuit of motion.

Half unſung, but narrower bound
Within the viſible diurnal ſphere. Milton.

5. Province; compaſs of knowledge or action; employment. [From the ſphere of activity aſcribed to the power emanating from bodies.]

To be call'd into a huge ſphere, and not to be ſeen to move in't. Shakeſp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Of enemies he could not but contract good ſtore, while moving in ſo high a ſphere, and with ſo vigorous a noſtre. K. C.

Every man, verſed in any particular buſineſs, finds fault with theſe authors, ſo far as they treat of matters within his ſphere. Addiſon's Freeholder.

Ye know the ſpheres and various taſks aſſign'd
By laws eternal to the aethereal kind. Pope.

To SPHERE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To place in a ſphere.

The glorious planet Sol,
In noble eminence enthron'd and ſphere'd
Amidſt the reſt, whoſe med'cinable eye
Corrects the ill aſpects of planets evil. Shakeſpeare.

2. To form into roundneſs.

Light from her native Eaſt
To journey through the airy gloom began,
Sphere'd in a radiant cloud, for yet the ſun
Was not. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

SPHE'RICAL. SPHE'RICK. } adj. [ſphérique, French; from ſphere.]

1. Round, orbicular; globular.

What deſcent of waters could there be in a ſpherical and round body, wherein there is nor high nor low. Raleigh.

Though ſounds ſpread round, ſo that there is an orb or ſpherical area of the ſound, yet they go fartheſt in the forelines from the firſt local impulſion of the air. Bacon.

By diſcernment of the moiſture drawn up in vapours, we muſt know the reaſon of the ſpherical figures of the drops. Glan.

A fluid maſs neceſſarily falls into a ſpherical ſurface. Ken.

Where the central nodule was globular, the inner ſurface of the firſt cruſt would be ſpherick, and if the cruſt was in all parts of the ſame thickneſs, that whole cruſt would be ſpherical. Woodward on Foſſils.

2. Planetary; relating to orbs of the planets.

We make guilty of our diſaſters the ſun, the moon, and ſtars, as if we were villains by ſpherical predominance. Shakeſ.

For he by faithful spial was assured
That Egypt's king was forward on his way. Fairfax.

Their trust towards them hath rather been as to good spials or good whisperers, than good magistrates and officers. Bac.

SPICE. n. f. [épice, French.]

1. A vegetable production, fragrant to the smell and pungent to the palate, an aromatick substance used in sauces.

Dang'rous rocks,
Which, touching but my gentle vessel's side,
Would scatter all the spices on the stream Shakespeare.

Is not manhood, learning, gentleness, and virtue, the spice and salt that seasons a man? Shakesp. Troil and Cressida.

The traffick of the spice-merchants. 1 Kings x. 15.

Garlick, the northern spice, is in mighty request among the Indians. Temple.

High sauces and rich spices are fetched from the Indies. Baker.

2. A small quantity, as of spice to the thing seasoned.

Think what they have done,
And then run stark mad, for all
Thy by-gone fooleries were but spices of it. Shakespeare.

In [illegible], without some spice or sprinkling of all learning. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

So in the wicked there's no vice,
Of which the saints have not a spice. Hudibras.

To SPICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To season with spice, to mix with aromatick bodies.

His mother was a votress of my order,
And in the spiced Indian air by night
Full often she hath gossip'd by my side. Shakespeare.

These hymns may work on future wits, and so
May great-grand-children of thy praises grow;
And so, though not revive, embalm and spice
The world, which else would putrify with vice. Donne.

What though some have a draught
Of cloves and nutmegs, and in cinnamon sail,
If thou hast wherewithal to spice a draught,
When griefs prevail? Herbert.

SPICER. n. f. [from spice.] One who deals in spice.

Names have been derived from occupations, as Salter and Spicer. Camden.

SPICERY. n. f. [épiceries, French, from spice.]

1. The commodity of spices.

Their camels were loaden with spicery, and balm and myrrh. Raleigh's History of the World.

The western treasure, eastern spicery,
Europe and Africk, and the unknown rest,
Were easily found Donne.

2. A repository of spice.

The spicery, the cellar and its furniture, are too well known to be here insisted upon. Addison on Italy.

SPICK and SPAN. [This word I should not have expected to be found authorised by a polite writer. Span-new is used by Chaucer, and is supposed to come from spannan, to stretch, Sax. expandere, Lat. whence span. Span-new is therefore originally used of cloath new extended or dressed at the clothiers, and spick and span is newly extended on the spikes or tenters. It is however a low word.] Quite new; now first used

While the honour, thou hast got,
Is spick and span new, piping hot,
Strike her up bravely Butler.

They would have these reduced to nothing, and then others created pick and pan new out of nothing. Burnet.

I keep no ant quated stuff,
But spick and span I have enough. Swift.

SPICKNEL. n. f. The herb maldmony or bearwort. Dict.

And in hot Ceylon spicy forests grew. Dryden.

2. Aromatick; having the qualities of spice.

Off at sea north-east winds blow
Sabæan odour, from the spicy shore
Of Araby the blest, with such delay
Well pleas'd they slack their course, and many a league,
Cheer'd with the grateful smell, old ocean smiles. Milt.

The regimen in this disease ought to be of spicy and cephalick vegetables, to dispel the viscosity. Arbuthnot on Diet.

Under southern skies exalt their sails,
Led by new stars, and borne by spicy gales! Pope.

SPICOSITY. n. f. [spica, Latin.] The quality of being spiked like ears of corn; fulness of ears. Dict.

SPIDER. n. f. [Skinner thinks this word softened from spinder, or spinner, from spin. Junius, with his usual ferocity, dreams that it comes from σπάζειν, to extend; for the spider extends his web. Perhaps it comes from spieden, Dutch, [illegible], Danish, to spy, to lye upon the catch. Drip, born, [illegible] is a beetle, or properly an humble bee, or stinging bee. May not spider be spy der, the object that watches the deer?] The animal that spins a web for flies.

More direful hap betide that hated wretch,
Than I can wish to adders, spiders, toads, [illegible]
The spider's web to watch we'll stand,
And when it takes the bee,
We'll help out of the tyrant's hand
The innocent to free [illegible]
[illegible], refine, [illegible],
Fear no officious damsel's broom,
Extend thy artful fabrick wider,
And spread thy banners round my room
While I thy curious fabrick stare at,
And think on hapless poet's fate,
Like thee confin'd to noisome garret,
And rudely banish'd rooms of state. Dr Littleton.

The spider's touch how exquisitely fine!
Feels at each thread, and lives along the line. Pope.

SPIDERWORT. n. f. [phalangium, Latin.] A plant with a lily-flower, composed of six petals. Miller.

SPIGNEL. n. f. [meum, Latin.] A plant.

The characters are: it is an umbelliferous plant, with very narrow leaves: the seeds are large, oblong, and striated. To which may be added, it hath a perennial root. It is medicinal. Miller.

SPIGOT. n. f. [spycker, Dutch.] A pin or peg put into the faucet to keep in the liquor.

Base Hungarian wight, wilt thou the spigot wield. Shakesp.

Take out the spigot, and clap the pouit in your mouth Sw.

SPIKE. n. f. [spica, Latin.]

1. An ear of corn.

Drawn up in ranks and files, the bearded spikes
Guard it from birds as with a stand of pikes. Dryden.

2. To set with spikes.

A youth, leaping over the spiked pales, was suddenly frighted down, and in his falling he was catched by those spikes. L'Estrange.

SPIKENARD. n. f. [spica nardi, Latin.] A sort, a kind, or balsam produced from the plant.

There are three sorts of spikenard. 1. The Indian spikenard is most famous: it is a congeries of fibrous substances adhering to the upper part of the root, of an agreeable aromatick and bitterish taste: it grows plentifully in Java. It has been known to the medical writers of all ages. 2. Celtick spikenard is an oblong root, of an irregular figure, a fragrant and aromatick but not very pleasant smell. It had its name from Celtick Gaul, and is still found in great abundance on the Alpine and Pyrenean mountains. 3. Mountain spikenard is a moderately large oblong root of a plant of the valerian kind, its smell and qualities resembling those of the Celtick spikenard. Ex H. Mat. Med.

A woman having an alabaſter box of ointment of [illegible], brake and poured it on his head Mar. xiv.

Which, as thou know'ſt, unjuſtly muſt be ſpilt. Shakeſp.

Friend or brother,
He forfeits his own blood that ſpills another. Shak. Timon.

Themſelves exact their cruelty,
And I conſtrained am this blood to ſpill. Daniel's Civil War.

They having ſpilt much blood, and done much waſte,
Subduing nations; and atchiev'd thereby
Fame in the world, high titles, and rich prey,
Shall change their courſe to pleaſure, eaſe, and ſloth Milton.

Sichæus' blood, by his falſe brother ſpilt,
I have reveng'd. Denham.

Medea muſt not draw her murth'ring knife,
And ſpill her children's blood upon the ſtage. Roſcommon.

Orbellan did diſgrace
With treach'rous deeds our mighty mother's race,
And to revenge his blood, ſo juſtly ſpilt,
What is it leſs than to partake his guilt? Dryden.

Nor the Centaurs tale
Be here repeated; how, with luſt and wine
Inflam'd, they fought and ſpilt their drunken ſouls
At feaſting hour Philips.

2. To deſtroy, to miſchief.

Thus is our thought with pain of thiſtle tilled,
Thus be our nobleſt parts dried up with ſorrow;
Thus is our mind with too much minding ſpilled S. ...

Why are ye ſo fierce and cruel?
Is it becauſe your eyes have power to kill?
Then know that mercy is the Mighty's jewel,
And greater glory think to ſave than ſpill. Spenſer

Thou all-ſhaking thunder,
Crack nature's mould, all germins ſpill at once
That make ingrateful man. Shakeſ. King Lear.

Be not angry with theſe fires,
For then their threats will kill me
Nor look too kind on my deſires;
For then my hopes will ſpill me. Ben. Johnſon.

All bodies are with other bodies filled;
But ſhe receives both heav'n and earth together
Nor are their forms by raſh encounters ſpilt,
For there they ſtand, and neither toucheth either. Davies.

3. To throw away.

This ſight ſhall damp the raging ruffian's breaſt,
The poiſon ſpill, and halt drawn ſword arreſt. Tickell.

The blood out of their helmets ſpun,
So ſharp were their encounters. Drayton's Nymphid.

3. To move round as a ſpindle.

Whether the ſun, predominant in heav'n,
Riſe on the earth, or earth riſe on the ſun,
He from the Eaſt his flaming road begin,
Or ſhe from Weſt her ſilent courſe advance
With inoffenſive pace, that ſpinning ſleeps
[illegible]
And bears thee ſoft with the ſmooth air along,
Solicit not thy thoughts. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b.

As when a ſhipwright ſtands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimble ſome huge beam to bore,
Urg'd on all hands it nimbly ſpins about,
The grain deep piercing 'till it ſcoops it out. Pope.

SPI'NACH. } n. ſ. [ſpinachia, Latin.] A plant.
SPINAGE }

It hath an apetalous flower, conſiſting of many ſtamina included in the flower-cup, which are produced in ſpikes upon the male plants which are barren; but the embryoes are produced from the wings of the leaves on the female plants, which afterward become roundiſh or angular ſeeds, which, in ſome ſorts, have thorns adhering to them Miller.

Spinage is an excellent herb crude, or boiled Mortimer.

SPI'NAL adj. [ſpina, Latin.] Belonging to the back bone.

Oh spring to light auspicious babe be born. Pope.

7. To proceed as from ancestors.
How youngly he began to serve his country,
How long continued; and what stock he springs of;
The noble house of Marcius. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Our Lord sprung out of Juden. Heb. vii. 14.
All these
Shall, like the brethren sprung of dragon's teeth,
Ruin each other, and he fall amongst 'em. Ben. Johnson.
Heroes of old, by rapine, and by spoil,
In search of fame did all the world embroil;

Thus

Thus to their gods, each then ally'd his name,
This sprang from Jove, and that from Titan came. Granv.

8. To proceed as from a ground, cause, or reason.

They found new hope to spring
Out of despair Milton.

Some have been deceived into an opinion, that the inheritance of rule over men, and property in things, sprang from the same original, and were to descend by the same rules. Locke.

Do not blast my springing hopes
Which thy kind hand has planted in my soul. Rowe.

9. To grow, to thrive.

What makes all this but Jupiter the king,
At whose command we perish and we spring
Then 'tis our best, since thus ordain'd to die,
To make a virtue of necessity Dryden's Knight's Tale.

10. To bound, to leap, to jump.

Some strange commotion
Is in his brain, he bites his lip, and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple; straight
Springs out into fast gait, then stops again. Shak. H. VIII.

I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a man chuse, than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man Shakesp.

He called for a light, and sprang in and fell before Paris. Id.

When heav'n was nam'd, they loos'd their hold again,
Then sprang she forth, they follow'd her amain. Dryden.

Her blood already fever'd, with a furious leap
She sprung from bed. Dryden.

Nor rises she long; but as her fates ordain,
Springs up to life, and fresh to second pain,
Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.

See, aw'd by heaven, the blooming Hebrew flies
Her artful tongue, and more persuasive eyes;
And springing from her disappointed arms,
Prefers a dungeon to forbidden charms. Badmore.

From height to height, and bounds along the plains,

That mountain stag would I once rather be,
Than be a slave. Prior's Britain.

11. To fly with elastick power.

A link of horsehair, that will easily slip, fasten to the end of the stick that springs. Mortimer's Husbandry.

12. To rise from a covert.

My doors are hateful to my eyes,
Fill'd and damn'd up with gaping creditors,
Watchful as fowlers when their game will spring. Otway.

A covey of partridges springing in our front, put our

13. To rise from a fountain.

Israel's servants digged in the valley, and found a well of springing water Gen. xxvi. 19.

Where Tigris and Euphrates springs;
And from the Danube's frosty banks to those
Where from an unknown head great Nilus flows. Rofcomm.

14. To proceed as from a source.

Fly, fly, prophane fogs! far hence fly away,
Taint not the pure streams of the springing day
With your dull influence 'tis for you
To sit and scowl upon night's heavy brow.

15. To shoot; to flee with speed and violence.

Then shook the sacred shrine, and sudden light
Sprung thro' the vaulted roof, and made the temple bright.
The pow'r, behold the pow'r in glory shone,
By her bent bow and her keen arrows known. Dryden.

The friendly gods a springing gale enlarg'd,
The fleet swift skimming o'er the surges flew,
And Grecian cliffs appeared. Pope.

To SPRING. v. a.

1. To start, to rouse game.

Thus I reclaim'd my buzzard love to fly
At what, and when, and how, and where I chose:
Now negligent of sport I lie,
And now, as other fawkners use,
I spring a mistress, swear, write, sigh, and dye,
And the game kill'd, or lost, go talk or lie. Donne.

That sprung the game you were to set,
Before you had time to draw the net. Hudibras.

A large cock pheasant he sprung in one of the neighbouring woods. Addison's Spectator.

Here I use a great deal of diligence before I can spring any thing, whereas in town, whilst I am following one character, I am crolled by another, that they puzzle the chace. Addison.

See how the well-taught pointer leads the way!
The scent grows warm, he stops, he springs the prey. Gay.

2. To produce to light.

The nurse, surpriz'd with fright,
Starts and leaves her bed, and springs a light. Dryden.

Thus man by his own strength to heav'n would soar,
And would not be obliged to God for more.
Vain, wretched creature, how art thou misled,
To think thy wit these godlike notions bred!
These truths are not the product of thy mind,
But dropt from heaven, and of a nobler kind
Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy light,
And reason saw not, 'till faith sprung the light. Dryden.

He that has such a burning zeal, and springs such mighty discoveries, must needs be an admirable patriot. Cato.

3. To make by starting a plank.

People discharge themselves of burdensome reflections, as of the cargo of a ship that has sprung a leak. L'Estrange.

No more accuse thy pen; but charge the crime
On native sloth, and negligence of time
Beware the publick slaughter of the town,
Thou sprung'st a leak already in thy crown. Dryden.

Whether she sprang a leak, I cannot find,
Or whether she was overset with wind,
But down at once with all her crew she went. Dryden.

4. To discharge a mine.

Our miners discovered several of the enemies mines, who have sprung divers others which did little execution. Tatler.

I sprung a mine, whereby the whole rest was overthrown.

5. To contrive as a sudden expedient, to offer unexpectedly.

6. To produce hastily.

7. To pass by leaping. A barbarous use.

Unbeseeming skill
To spring the fence, to rein the prancing steed. Thomson.

SPRING. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The season in which plants spring and vegetate; the vernal season.

Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain-tops, that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing
To his musick, plants and flowers
Ever sprung, as sun and showers
There had made a lasting Spring. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.

The Spring visiteth not these quarters so timely as the eastern parts. Carew.

Come, gentle Spring, ethereal mildness come,
And from the bosom of yon dropping cloud
Upon our plains descend. Thomson's Spring.

2. An elastick body; a body which when distorted has the power of restoring itself to its former state.

Spring as is used in watches: this spring may be applied to one

Wilkins's Math. Magick.

The spring must be made of good steel, well tempered; and the wider the two ends of the spring stand asunder, the milder it throws the chaps of the vice open Moxon's Mech. Exer.

He that was sharp sighted enough to see the configuration of the minute particles of the spring of a clock, and upon what peculiar impulse its elastick motion depends, would no doubt discover something very admirable. Locke.

3. Elastick force.

Heav'ns, what a spring was in his arm, to throw!
How high he held his shield, and rose at ev'ry blow! Dryd.

Bodies which are absolutely hard, or so soft as to be void of elasticity, will not rebound from one another impenetrability makes them only stop. If two equal bodies meet directly in vacuo, they will by the laws of motion stop where they meet, lose their motion, and remain in rest, unless they be elastick, and receive new motion from their spring. Newt.

The soul is gathered within herself, and recovers that spring which is weakened, when she operates more in concert with the body Addison.

In adult persons, when the fibres cannot any more yield, they must break, or lose their spring. Arbuthnot.

4. Any active power; any cause by which motion is produced or propagated.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the springs of life,
So much the name of father awes me still. Dryden.

Nature is the same, and man is the same; has the same affections and passions, and the same springs that give them motion. Rymer.

Our author shuns by vulgar springs to move
The hero's glory, or the virgin's love. Pope's Prol. to Cato.

5. A leap, a bound, a jump, a violent effort, a sudden struggle.

The prisoner with a spring from prison broke:
Then stretch'd his feather'd vans with all his might,
And to the neighb'ring maple wing'd his flight.

With what a spring his furious soul broke loose,
And left the limbs still quivering on the ground. Add. Cato.

O. A

6. A leak, a ſtart of plank.
Each petty hand
Can ſteer a ſhip becalm'd, but he that will Govern, and carry her to her ends, muſt know
His tides, his current; how to ſhift his ſails,
Where her ſprings are, her leaks, and how to ſtop 'em
Ben Jonſon's Catiline.

7. A fountain, an iſſue of water from the earth.
Now ſtop thy ſprings, my ſea ſhall ſuck them dry,
And ſwell ſo much the higher by their ebb. Shakeſp. H. VI.
Springs on the tops of hills paſs through a great deal of pure earth, without the mixture of other waters. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.
When in th' effects ſhe doth the cauſes know,
And ſeeing the ſtream, thinks where the ſpring doth riſe,
And ſeeing the branch, conceives the root below
Theſe things ſhe views without the body's eyes. Davies.
He adds the running ſprings and ſtanding lakes,
And bounding barks for winding rivers makes. Dryden.
Nor hears him knocking at his ſeven-fold gates,
And ſeeks his hidden ſpring, and fears his neighbours fates. Dry.
He bathed himſelf in cold ſpring water in the moſt of Winter Locke.
The water that falls down from the clouds, ſinking into beds of rock or clay, breaks out in ſprings, commonly at the bottom of hilly ground. Locke.

8. A ſource, that by which any thing is ſupplied
To that great ſprin, which doth great kingdoms move,
The ſacred ſpring, whence right and honour ſtream,
Diffuſing virtue, ſhedding peace and love
In every place, as Cynthia ſheds her beams. Davies.
I move, I ſee, I ſpeak, diſcourſe, and know,
Though now I am, I was not always ſo.
Then that from which I was, muſt be before,
Whom, as my ſpring of being, I adore. Dryden.
Rolling down through ſo many barbarous ages, from the ſpring of Virgil, it bears along with it the filth of the Goths and Vandals. Dryden.
He has a ſecret ſpring of ſpiritual joy, and the continual feaſt of a good conſcience within, that forbids him to be miſerable. Bentley.

Spurgall'd and tir'd, by jaunting Bolingbroke. Shakespeare.
What! shall each spurgall'd hackney of the day,
Or each new pension'd sycophant, pretend
To break my windows, if I treat a friend. Pope.

SPURGE. n. s. [espurge, French; spurge, Dutch, from purga, Latin.] A plant violently purgative. Spurge is a general name in English for all milky purgative plants. Skinner

The flower consists of one leaf, of the globous bell shape, cut into several moon-shaped segments, and encompassed by two little leaves, which seem to perform the office of a flower cup: the pointal is for the most part triangular, which rises from the bottom of the flower, and becomes a fruit of the same shape, divided into three cells, each containing an oblong seed. Every part of the plant abounds with a milky juice. There are seventy-one species of this plant, of which wartwort is one. The first sort, called broad-leaved spurge, is a biennial plant, and used in medicine under the name of cataputia minor. The milky juice in these plants is used by some to destroy warts, but particular care should be taken in the application, because it is a strong caustick. Miller.

The leaves of cataputia, or spurge, being plucked upwards or downwards, perform their operations by purge or vomit, is a strange conceit, ascribing unto plants positional operations. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

SPURGE Laurel, or Mezereon. n. s. [thymelæa, Latin.] A plant.
The characters are: the flower consists of one leaf, as, for the most part, funnel-shaped, and cut into four segments; from whose centre rises the pointal, which afterward becomes an oval fruit, which is in some full of juice, but in others is dry. In each is contained one oblong seed. It is a rough purge. Miller.

SPURIOUS. adj. [spurius, Latin.]

The characters are, it hath the whole appearance of a pumpion or gourd, from which this differs in its fruit, which is round, fleshy, streaked, angular, and for the most part divided into five partitions, inclosing flat seeds adhering to a spongy placenta. Miller.

Squash is an Indian kind of pumpion that grows apace. Boyle.

3. Any thing unripe; any thing soft. In contempt.

How like I then was to this kernel,
This squash, this gentleman. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

4. A sudden fall.

Since they will overload my shoulders, I shall throw down the burden with a squash among them. Arbuthnot.

5. A shock of soft bodies.

My fall was stopped by a terrible squash that sounded louder than the cataract of Niagara. Gulliver's Travels.

To SQUASH. v. a. To crush into pulp.

To SQUAT, v. n. [quatter, Italian.] To sit cowering; to sit close to the ground.

SQUAT. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Cowering, close to the ground.

Him there they found,
Squat like a toad, close at the ear of Eve. Milton.
Her dearest comrades never caught her
Squat on her hams. Swift.

2. Short and thick; having one part close to another, as those of an animal contracted and cowering.

The squill-insect is so called from some similitude to the squill-fish: the head is broad and squat. Grew.

Alma in verse, in prose, the mind,
By Aristotle's pen defin'd,
Throughout the body squat or tall,
Is bonâ fide, all in all. Prior.

SQUAT. n. f.

1. The posture of cowering or lying close.

A flutch-fall'n cheek that hangs below the jaw;
Such wrinkles as a skilful hand would draw
For an old grandam ape, when with a grace
She sits at squat, and scrubs her leathern face. Dryden.

2. A sudden fall.

Bruises, squats and falls, which often kill others, can bring little hurt to those that are temperate. Herbert.

SQUAT. n. f. A sort of mineral.

The squat consists of tin ore and spar incorporated. Woodw.

To SQUEAK. v. n. [squara, Swedish.]

1. To set up a sudden dolorous cry; to cry out with pain.

2. To cry with a shrill acute tone.

The sheeted dead
Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets. Shakespeare.

Cart wheels squeak not when they are liquored. Bacon.

I see the new Arion sail,
The lute still trembling under each thy nail
At thy well sharpen'd thumb from shore to shore,
The trebles squeak for fear, the bases roar. Dryden.

Blunderbusses planted in every loop-hole, go off constantly at the squeaking of a fiddle and the thrumming of a guitar.
Dryden's Spanish Friar.

Who can endure to hear one of the rough old Romans squeaking through the mouth of an eunuch? Addison.

How like brutes organs are to ours,
They grant, if higher pow'rs think fit,
A bear might soon be made a wit;
And that for any thing in nature,
Pigs might squeak love-odes, dogs bark satyr. Prior.

In florid impotence he speaks,
And as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks, Pope.

Zoilus calls the companions of Ulysses the squeaking pigs of Homer. Pope's Odyssey.

3 To break silence or secrecy for fear or pain.

If he be obstinate, put a civil question to him upon the rack, and he squeaks, I warrant him. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

SQUEAK. n. f. [from the verb.] A shrill quick cry; a cry of pain.

Ran cow and calf, and family of hogs,
In panick horrour of pursuing dogs
With many a deadly grunt and doleful squeak,
Thor swore! as if their pretty hearts would break. Dryden.

To SQUEAL. v. n. [squala, Swedish.] To cry with a shrill sharp voice, to cry with pain. Squeak seems a short sudden cry, and squeal a cry continued.

SQUEAMISH. adj. [for squeamish or qualmish, from qualm.] Nice; fastidious; easily disgusted; having the stomach easily turned, being apt to take offence without much reason. It is used always in dislike either real or ironical.

Yet, for countenance sake, he seemed very squeamish in respect of the charge he had of the princess Pamela. Sidney.

Quoth he, that honour's very squeamish,
That takes a balking for a blemish;
For what's more honourable than scars,
Or skin to tatters rent in wars? Hudibras.

His musick is rustick, and perhaps too plain,
The men of squeamish taste to entertain. Southern.

It is rare to see a man at once squeamish and voracious.
South.

There is no occasion to oppose the ancients and the moderns, or to be squeamish on either side. He that wisely conducts his mind in the pursuit of knowledge, will gather what lights he can from either. Locke.

SQUEA'MISHNESS. n. f. [from squeamish.] Niceness; delicacy; fastidiousness.

The thorough-pac'd politician must presently laugh at the squeamishness of his conscience, and read it another lecture.
South's Sermons.

[illegible] principles they may revive the worship of the [illegible]; it is but conquering a little squeamishness of [illegible] Swift.

[illegible] house, fifty thousand operators, considering the [illegible] squeamishness of some stomachs, and the peevishness of young children, is but reasonable. Swift.

To SQUEEZE. v. a. [cpyan, Saxon; yr gwasgu, Welsh.]

1. To press; to crush between two bodies.

It is applied to the squeezing or pressing of things downwards, as in the presses for printing. Wilkins.

The sinking of the earth would make an extraordinary convulsion of the air, and that crack must so shake or squeeze the atmosphere, as to bring down all the remaining vapours.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

He reap'd the product of his labour'd ground,
And squeez'd the combs with golden liquor crown'd. Dryden.

None acted mournings forc'd to flow,
Or squeeze his eyes to make the torrent flow. Dryden.

When Florio speaks, what virgin could withstand,
If gentle Damon did not squeeze her hand? Pope.

2. To oppress; to crush; to harass by extortion.

In a civil war people must expect to be crushed and squeezed toward the burden. L'Estrange.

3 To force between close bodies.

4. To act or pass, in consequence of compression.

A concave sphere of gold fill'd with water and solder'd up, upon pressing the sphere with great force, let the water squeeze through it, and stand all over its outside in multitudes of small drops, like dew, without bursting or cracking the body of the gold. Newton's Opticks.

What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,
Still run on poets, in a raging vein,
Ev'n to the dregs and squeezings of the brain. Pope.

5. To force way through close bodies.

Many a publick minister comes empty in; but when he has crammed his guts, he is fain to squeeze hard before he can get off. L'Estrange.

SQUEEZE. n. f. [from the verb.] Compression, pressure.

A subtile artist stands with wond'rous bags,
That bears imprison'd winds, of gentler sort
Than those that eas'd Laertes' son encloses
Peaceful they sleep; but let the touch squeeze
Of labouring elbow rouse them, out they fly
Melodious, and with spritely accents charm.

SQUELCH. n. f. Heavy fall. A low ludicrous word.

He tore the earth which he had sav'd
From [illegible]
So close as the poor devil [illegible]
he stampers, bawling like mad.

SQUIB. n. f. [schieten, German, to push forward. This etymology, though the best that I have found, is not very probable.]

1. A small pipe of paper filled with wildfire. Used in sport.

The armada at Calais, sir Walter Raleigh was wont prettily to say, were suddenly driven away with squibs, for it was no more than a stratagem of fire-boats marshes, and sent upon them. Bacon's War with Spain.

The forest of the south, compareth the French valour to a squib, or fire of flax, which burns and crackles for a time, but suddenly extinguishes. Howel's Local Parallels.

Lampoons, like squibs, may make a present blaze,
But time, and thunder, pay respect to bays. Waller.

Furious he begins his march,
Drives rattling o'er a brazen arch,
With squibs and crackers arm'd to throw
Among the trembling crowd below. Swift.

2. Any petty fellow.

Asked for their pass by every squib,
That list at will them to revile or snub. Spenser.

The squibs, in the common phrase, are called libellers. Tatler.

SQUILL. n. f. [squilla, scilla, Latin; squille, Fr.]

1. A plant.

It hath a large acrid bulbous root like an onion; the leaves are broad, the flowers are like those of ornithogalum, or the starry hyacinth: they grow in a long spike, and come out before the leaves. Miller.

Seed or kernels of apples and pears put into a squill, which is like a great onion, will come up earlier than in the earth itself. Bacon's Natural History.

'Twill down like oxymel of squills. Roscommon.

The self same atoms
Can, in the truffle, furnish out a feast,
And nauseate, in the scaly squill, the taste. Garth.

2. A fish.

3. An insect.

The squill-insect is so called from some similitude to the squill fish, in having a long body covered with a crust, composed of several rings, the head broad and squat. Grew.

SQUI'NANCY. n. f. [squinance, squinancie, Fr. squinanzia, Italian.] An inflammation in the throat, a quinsey.

It is used for squinances and inflammations of the throat; whereby it seemeth to have a mollifying and lenifying virtue.
[illegible]

In a squinancy there is danger of suffocation. Wiseman.

SQUINT. adj. [schuynte, Dutch, oblique, transverse.] Looking obliquely; looking not directly, looking suspiciously.

Where an equal poise of hope and fear
Does arbitrate the event, my nature is
That I incline to hope rather than fear,
And gladly banish squint suspicion. Milton.

To SQUINT. v. n. To look obliquely, to look not in a direct line of vision.

Some can squint when they will, and children set upon a table with a candle behind them, both eyes will move inwards, as affecting to see the light, and so induce squinting.
Bacon's Natural History.

Not a period of this epistle but squints towards another over against it. Pope.

To SQUINT. a.

1. To form the eye to oblique vision.

This is the foul Flibbertigibbet; he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the hare-lip. Shakespeare.

2. To turn the eye obliquely.

Perkin began already to squint one eye upon the crown, and another upon the sanctuary. Bacon's Henry VII.

SQUI'NTEYED. adj. [squint and eye.]

1. Having the sight directed oblique.

He was so squinteyed, that he seemed spitefully to look upon them whom he beheld. Knolles's History of the Turks.

2. Indirect; oblique; malignant.

This is such a false and squinteyed praise,
Which seeming to look upwards on his glories,
Looks down upon my fears. Denham.

SQUINTIFE'GO. adj. Squinting. A cant word.

The timbrel and the squintifego maid
Of Lesbos thee; lest the gods for sin,
Should, with a swelling dropsy stuff thy skin. Dryden.

To SQUINT. v. n. To look asquint. A cant word.

I remember I once saw him

Do'st thou squint at me? Shakespeare's King Lear.

SQUIRE. n. s. [Contraction of esquire, escuyer, French. See ESQUIRE.]

1. A gentleman next in rank to a knight.

He will maintain you like a gentlewoman.—Ay, that I will, come cut and long tail under the degree of a squire. Shakesp.

The rest are princes, barons, knights, squires,
And gentlemen of blood Shakespeare's Henry V.

2. An attendant on a noble warriour.

Old Butes' form he took, Anchises' squire
Now left to rule Ascanius. Dryden's Æneid.

Knights, squires, and steeds must enter on the stage. Pope.

3. An attendant at court.

Return with her—
I could as well be brought
To knee his throne, and squire-like pension beg,
To keep base life a-foot. Shakespeare's King Lear.

SQUIRREL. n. s. [escurieu, French, scurus, Latin.] A small animal that lives in woods, remarkable for leaping from tree to tree.

One chanc'd to find a nut,
In the end of which a hole was cut,
Which lay upon a hazel-root,
There scatter'd by a squirrel
Which out the kernel gotten had,
When quoth this fay, dear queen be glad,
Let Oberon be ne'er so mad,
I'll set you safe from peril Drayton.

To SQUIRT. v. a. To throw out in a quick stream. Of uncertain etymology.

Sir Roger she mortally hated, and used to hire fellows to squirt kennel water upon him as he passed along. Arbuthnot.

To SQUIRT. v. n. To prate, to let fly. Low cant.

You are so given to squirting up and down, and chattering, that the world would say, I had chosen a jack-pudding for a prime minister L'Estrange.

SQUIRT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An instrument by which a quick stream is ejected.

He with his squirt fire could disperse
Whole troops. Hudibras.

There is war declared by a lord, his weapons are a pin to scratch, and a squirt to bespatter. Pope.

2. A small quick stream.

Water those with squirts of an infusion of the medicine in damped water Bacon's Natural History.

SQUIRTER. n. s. [from squirt.] One that plies a squirt.

The squirters were at it with their kennel water, for they were mad for the loss of their bubble. Arbuthnot.

To STAB. v. a. [storen, old Dutch.]

1. To pierce with a pointed weapon.

Be't lawful, that I invocate thy ghost,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne,
Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughter'd son;
Stabb'd by the self same hand that made these wounds Shak.

Thou hid'st a thousand daggers in thy thoughts,
Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,
To stab at my frail life. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

None shall dare
With shorten'd sword to stab in closer war,
But in fair combat fight. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

Killing a man with a sword or a hatchet, are looked on as no distinct species of action, but if the point of the sword first enter the body, it passes for a distinct species where it has a distinct name, as in England, where it is called stabbing. Locke.

Pope us, think, thou seest thy dying brother
Stabb'd at his heart, and all besmear'd with blood,
Storming at thee! Addison's Cato.

2. To wound mortally or mischievously.

He speaks poniards, and every word stabs Shakespeare.

What tears will then be shed!
Then, to compleat her woes, will I espouse
Hermione.—'twill stab her to the heart! A. Philips.

STAB. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A stab or wound with a sharp pointed weapon.

The elements
Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well
Wound the loud winds, or with bemockt at stabs
Kill the still closing waters. Shakespeare.

Cleander,
Unworthy was thy fate, thou first of warriours,
To fall beneath a base assassin's stab. Rowe.

2. [illegible], a fly mischief.

STABILITY. n. s. [stabilité, Fr. from stabilitas, Latin.]

1. Stableness; steadiness, strength to stand.

By the same degrees that either of these happens, the stability of the figure is by the same lessened Temple.

These mighty girders which the fabrick bind,
These ribs robust and vast in order join'd,
Such strength and such stability impart,
That storms above, and earthquakes under ground
Break not the pillars. Blackmore.

He began to try
The [illegible], and that hanging alone's stability. [illegible]

2. [illegible], not fluidity.

Since hardness and stability are contrary qualities, we may conceive that the firmness or stability of a body consists in this, that the particles which compose it do so rest, or are intangled, that there is among them a mutual cohesion. Boyle.

3. Firmness of resolution.

STABLE. adj. [stable, Fr. stabilis, Latin.]

1. Fixed; able to stand.

2. Constant, fixed in resolution or conduct.

If man would be unvariable,
He must be like a rock or stone, or tree;
For ev'n the perfect angels were not stable,
But had a far more desperate than we. Dennis.

He perfect, stable; but imperfect we,
Subject to change. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

3. Strong; fixed in state.

This region of chance and vanity, where nothing is stable, nothing equal, nothing could be offered to-day but what to-morrow might deprive us of. Rogers's Sermons.

The fiery steed, and trains him to his hand? Addison's Cato.
See! the bold youth strain up the threat'ning steep,
Hang o'er their coursers heads with eager speed,
And earth rolls back beneath the flying steed. Pope.

STEEL. n. s. [yeal, Saxon; staal, Dutch.]
1. Steel is a kind of iron, refined and purified by the fire with other ingredients, which renders it white, and its grain closer and finer than common iron. Steel, of all other metals, is that susceptible of the greatest degree of hardness, when well tempered; whence its great use in the making of tools and instruments of all kinds. Chambers.

Steel is made from the purest and softest iron, by keeping it red-hot, stratified with coal-dust and wood-ashes, or other substances that abound in the phlogiston, for several hours in a close furnace. It may also be made by fusion, and several other ways, but they are greatly in the wrong who prefer steel to iron for medicinal purposes. Hill's Mat. Medica.
At her back a bow and quiver gay,
Stuff'd with steel-headed darts wherewith she quell'd
The savage beasts in her victorious play. Fairy Queen.
With mighty bars of long enduring brass
The steel-bound doors and iron gates he ties. Fairfax.
A looking-glass, with the steel behind, looketh whiter than glass simple. Bacon's Natural History.
Diamonds, though hard bodies, will not ready strike fire with steel, much less with one another, nor a flint easily with a steel, if they both be wet; the sparks being then quenched in their eruption. Brown's Vulgar Errours
Both were of shining steel, and wrought so pure
As might the strokes of two such arms endure. Dryden.
2. It is often used metonymically for weapons or armour.
Brave Macbeth with his brandish'd steel
Which smok'd with bloody execution,
Carv'd out his passage till he had fac'd the slave. Shakespeare.
A grove of oaks,
Whose polish'd steel from far severely shines,
Are not so dreadful as this beauteous queen. Dryden.
He sudden as the word,
In proud Plexippus' bosom plunged the sword,
Toxeus amaz'd, and with amazement slow,
Stood doubting, and while doubting thus he stood,
Receiv'd the steel bath'd in his brother's blood. Dryd.
3. Chalybeate medicines.
After relaxing, steel strengthens the solids, and is likewise an antacid Arbuthnot.
4. It is used proverbially for hardness: as heads of steel.

To STEEL. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To point or edge with steel.
Arm proof unto mine armour with thy prayers,
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point. Shak. R. II

2. To make hard or firm. It is used, if it be applied to the mind, very often in a bad ſenſe.

Lies well ſteel'd with weighty arguments. Shakeſpeare.

So ſervice ſhall with ſteeled ſinews toil,
And labour ſhall refreſh itſelf with hope. Shakeſpeare's H. V.

From his metal was his party ſteel'd;
Which once in him rebated, all the reſt
Turn'd on themſelves, like dull and heavy lead. Shakeſp.

O God of battles! ſteel my ſoldiers hearts,
Poſſeſs them not with fear. Shakeſpeare's Henry V.

Why will you fight againſt ſo ſweet a paſſion,
And ſteel your heart to ſuch a word of charms? Addiſon.

Man, foolish man!
Thou know'ſt how thyſelf began;
Yet ſteel'd with ſtudy'd boldneſs, thou dar'ſt try
To ſend thy doubted reaſon's dazzled eye
Through the myſterious gulph of vaſt immenſity. Prior.

Let the ſteel'd Turk be deaf to matrons cries,
See virgins ravish'd with reſiſtleſs eyes. Tickell.

STEE'LY. adj. [from ſteel.]

1. Made of ſteel.

As that Theban monſter that propos'd
Her riddle, and him, who ſolv'd it not, devour'd,
That once found out and ſolv'd, for grief and ſpight
Caſt herſelf headlong from the Iſmenian ſteep. Milton.

As high turrets for their airy ſteep
Require foundations, in proportion deep;
And lofty cedars as far upwards ſhoot,
As to the neather heavens they drive the root;
So low did her ſecure foundation lie,
She was not humble, but humility. Dryden.

Inſtructs the beaſt to know his native force,
To take the bit between his teeth, and fly
To the next headlong ſteep of anarchy. Dryden.

We had on each ſide naked rocks and mountains, broken into a thouſand irregular ſteeps and precipices. Addiſon.

Leaning o'er the rails, he muſing ſtood,
And view'd below the black canal of mud,
Where common ſhores a lulling murmur keep,
Whoſe torrents ruſh from Holborn's fatal ſteep. Gay.

To STEEP. v. a. [ſtippen, Dutch.] To ſoak, to macerate, to imbue; to dip.

The breadth of every ſingle ſtep or ſtair ſhould be never leſs than one foot, nor more than eighteen inches. Wotton.

Thoſe heights where William's virtue might have ſtaid,
And on the ſubject world look'd ſafely down,
By Marlbro' paſs'd, the props and ſteps were made
Sublimer yet to raiſe his queen's renown. Prior.

It was a ſaying among the ancients, truth lies in a well, and, to carry on this metaphor, we may juſtly ſay, that logick does ſupply us with ſteps, whereby we may go down to reach the water. Watts.

3. Quantity of ſpace paſſed or meaſured by one removal of the foot.

The gradus, a Roman meaſure, may be tranſlated a ſtep, or the half of a paſſus or pace. Arbuthnot on Coins.

4. A ſmall length; a ſmall ſpace.

There is but a ſtep between me and death. 1 Sa. xx. 3.

5. Walk; paſſage.

O may thy pow'r, propitious ſtill to me,
Conduct my ſteps to find the fatal tree
In this deep foreſt. Dryden's Æn.

6. Progreſſion; act of advancing.

To derive two or three general principles of motion from phænomena, and afterwards to tell us how the properties and actions of all corporeal things follow from thoſe manifeſt principles, would be a very great ſtep in philoſophy, though the cauſes of thoſe principles were not yet diſcovered. Newton.

One

One injury is beſt defended by a ſecond, and this by a third: by theſe ſteps the old maſters of the palace in France became maſters of the kingdom; and by theſe ſteps a general, during pleaſure, might have grown into a general for life, and a general for life into a king. Swift.

The queriſt muſt not proceed too ſwiftly towards the determination of his point, that he may with more eaſe draw the learner to thoſe principles ſtep by ſtep, from whence the final concluſion will ariſe. Watts.

7. Footſtep; print of the foot.

From hence Aſtrea took her flight, and here
The prints of her departing ſteps appear. Dryden's Virgil.

8. Gait; manner of walking.

Sudden from the golden throne
With a ſubmiſſive ſtep I haſted down,
The growing garland from my hair I took,
Love in my heart, obedience in my look. Prior.

9. Action; inſtance of conduct.

The reputation of a man depends upon the firſt ſteps he makes in the world. Pope.

STEP, in compoſition, ſignifies one who is related only by marriage. [Steop, Saxon, from reopan, to deprive or make an orphan; for the Saxons not only ſaid a ſtep-mother, but a ſtep-daughter, or ſtep-ſon, to which it indeed, according to this etymology, more properly belongs: but as it is now ſeldom applied but to the mother, it ſeems to mean, in the mind of thoſe who uſe it, a woman who has ſtepped into the vacant place of the true mother.]

How ſhould their minds chuſe but miſdoubt, leſt this diſcipline, which always you match with divine doctrine as her natural and true ſiſter, be found unto all kinds of knowledge a ſtep-mother. Hooker.

His wanton ſtep-dame loved him the more;
But when ſhe ſaw her offered ſweets refuſe,
Her love ſhe turn'd to hate. Fairy Queen.

You ſhall not find me, daughter,
After the ſlander of moſt ſtep-mothers,
Ill-ey'd unto you. Shakeſ. Cymbeline.

A father cruel, and a ſtep-dame falſe. Shakeſpeare.

Cato the elder, being aged, buried his wife, and married a young woman. His ſon came to him, and ſaid, Sir, what have I offended, that you have brought a ſtep-mother into your houſe? The old man anſwered, Nay, quite the contrary, ſon; thou pleaſeſt me ſo well, as I would be glad to have more ſuch. Bacon.

The name of ſtep-dame, your practis'd art,
By which you have eſtrang'd my father's heart,
All you have done againſt me, or deſign,
Shows your averſion, but begets not mine. Dryd. Aurengz.

A ſtep-dame too I have, a curſed ſhe,
Who rules my hen-peck'd ſire, and orders me. Dryden.

Any body would have gueſſed miſs to have been bred up under the influence of a cruel ſtep-dame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. Arbuthn. Hiſt. of John Bull.

STE'PPINGSTONE. n. ſ. [ſtep and ſtone.] Stone laid to catch the foot, and ſave it from wet or dirt.

Thy ſea marge ſteril, and rocky hard. Shakeſ. Tempeſt.

In very ſteril years corn ſown will grow to another kind. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

To ſeparate ſeeds, put them in water: ſuch as are corrupted and ſteril ſwim. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

She is grown ſteril and barren, and her births of animals are now very inconſiderable. More's Antidote againſt Atheiſm.

When the vegetative ſtratum was once waſhed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the ſtrata below yielding only more ſteril and mineral matter, ſuch as was inept for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

STERI'LITY. n. ſ. [ſtérilité, French; ſterilitas, from ſterilis, Latin.] Barrenneſs; want of fecundity; unfruitfulneſs.

Spain is thin ſown of people, by reaſon of the ſterility of the ſoil, and becauſe their natives are exhauſted by ſo many employments in ſuch vaſt territories. Bacon's War with Spain.

An eternal ſterility muſt have poſſeſſed the world, where all things had been faſtened everlaſtingly with the adamantine chains of ſpecifick gravity, if the Almighty had not ſaid, Let the earth bring forth graſs, the herb yielding ſeed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit. Bentley's Sermons.

He had more frequent occaſion for repetition than any poet; yet one cannot aſcribe this to any ſterility of expreſſion, but to the genius of his times, which delighted in theſe reiterated verſes. Pope's Eſſay on Homer.

To STE'RILIZE. v. a. [from ſteril.] To make barren; to deprive of fecundity, or the power of production.

May we not as well ſuppoſe the ſterilizing the earth was ſuſpended for ſome time, 'till the deluge became the executioner of it? Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

Go! ſterilize the fertile with thy rage. Savage.

The king's treaſure of ſtore, that he left at his death, amounted unto eighteen hundred thouſand pounds ſterling. Bacon's Henry VII.

Several of them would rather chuſe to count out a ſum in ſeſterces than in pounds ſterling. Addiſon.

2. Genuine; having paſt the teſt.

There is not one ſingle witty phraſe in this collection, which hath not received the ſtamp and approbation of one hundred years: he may therefore be ſecure to find them all genuine, ſterling, and authentick. Swift's Polite Converſation.

STE'RLING. n. ſ. [ſterlingum, low Lat. from the adjective.]

1. Engliſh coin, money.

This viſionary various projects tries,
And knows that to be rich is to be wiſe:
By uſeful obſervation he can tell
The ſacred charms that in true ſterling dwell;
How gold makes a patrician of a ſlave,
A dwarf an Atlas, a Therſites brave. Garth.

Great name, which in our rolls recorded ſtands,
Leads honours, and protects the learned bands,
Accept this offering to thy bounty due,
And Roman wealth in Engliſh ſterling view. C. Arbuthnot.

2. Standard rate.

STERN. adj. [ſtyrn, Saxon.]

1. Severe of countenance; truculent of aſpect.

Why look you ſtill ſo ſtern and tragical. Shakeſ. H. VI.

I would outſtare the ſterneſt eyes that look,
Outbrave the heart moſt daring on the earth,
Pluck the young ſucking cubs from the ſhe-bear,
Yea, mock the lion when he roars for prey,
To win thee, lady. Shakeſ. Merchant of Venice.

It ſhall not be amiſs here to preſent the very outward countenance of this ſo famous a man. Knolles's Hiſt. of the Turks.

Gods and men

Thou ſtern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorſeleſs. Shakeſp.

The common executioner,
Whoſe heart th' accuſtom'd ſight of death makes hard,
Falls not the ax upon the humbled neck,
But firſt begs pardon: will you ſterner be
Than he that deals and lives by bloody drops? Shakeſpeare.

Did this in Cæſar ſeem ambitious?
When that the poor have cry'd, Cæſar hath wept;
Ambition ſhould be made of ſternier ſtuff. Shak. Jul. Cæſ.

Then ſhall the war, and ſtern debate and ſtrife
Immortal, be the buſineſs of my life;
And in thy fane the duſty ſpoils among,
High on the burniſh'd roof, my banner ſhall be hung. Dryd.

How ſtern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We laſh the pupil and defraud the ward. Dryden's Perſ.

The faulty ſouls from thence brought to his heavenly bowr
Fairy Queen.

Love, that long time has to thy mighty powre
Per force subdu'd my poor captived heart,
And reigning now therein with restless stoure,
Do'st tyrannize in every weaker part.
The giant struck so mainly merciless,
That cou'd have overthrown a stonny tower,
And were not heavenly grace that him did bless,
He had been pouldered all as thin as flower,
But he was wary of that deadly stoure. Fairy Queen.

STOUT. n. s. [stout, Dutch, stolz, proud, German, hautan, Gothick, is to strike.]

1. Strong; lusty; valiant.
When I was young,
I do remember how my father said,
A stouter champion never handled sword. Shakesp. Hen. VI.
Some captain of the land or fleet,
Stout of his hands, but of a soldier's wit;
Cries, I have sense to serve my turn, in store,
And he's a rascal who pretends to more. Dryden.

2. Brave; bold, intrepid.

2. Any thing that pushes beyond the rest, or stands single.
Let thy hand supply the pruning knife,
And crop luxuriant stragglers, nor be loth
To strip the branches of their leafy growth. Dryden.

STRAIGHT adj. [strack, old Dutch.] It is well observed by Minsheu, that for not crooked we ought to write straight, and for narrow strait; but for streight, which is sometimes found, [illegible]

1. Not crooked, right.
Beauty made barren the swell'd boast
Of him that best could speak; feature, laming
The shrine of Venus, or straight-pight Minerva.
A hunter's horn and cornet is oblique; yet they have likewise straight horns; which, if they be of the same bore with the oblique, differ little in sound, save that the straight require somewhat a stronger blast Bacon's Natural History.
There are many several sorts of crooked lines, but there is one only which is straight Dryden.
Water and air the varied form confound;
The straight looks crooked, and the square grows round.
Prior.
When I see a strait staff appear crooked while half under the water, the water gives me a false idea. Watts's Logick.

2. Narrow; close. This should properly be strait, estroit, Fr. [See STRAIT.]
Queen Elizabeth used to say of her instructions to great officers, that they were like to garments, strait at the first putting on, but did by and by wear loose enough. Bacon.

STRAIGHT. adv. [strax, Danish, strack, Dutch.] Immediately; directly. This sense is naturally derived from the adjective, as a straight line is the shortest line between two points.
If the devil come and roar for them,
I will not send them. I will after straight,
And tell him so. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Those stinks which the nostrils straight abhor and expel, are not the most pernicious. Bacon's Natural History.
With chalk I first describe a circle here,
Where the aetherial spirits must appear:
Come in, come in, for here they will be strait:
Around, around the place I fumigate. Dryden.
I know thy generous temper well,
Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it,
It straight takes fire, and mounts into a blaze. Addison.

To STRAI'GHTEN. v. a. [from straight.] To make not crooked; to make straight.
A crooked stick is not straightened except it be as far bent on the clean contrary side. Hooker.
Of our selves being so apt to err, the only way which we have to straighten our paths is, by following the rule of his will, whose footsteps naturally are right. Hooker.

STRAI'GHTNESS. n. s. [from straight.] Rectitude, the contrary to crookedness.
Some are for masts, as fir and pine, because of their length and straightness. Bacon's Natural History.

STRAIGHTWAYS. adv. [from straight and way.] Straight.

Strain'd his depa ting friend; and tears o'erflow his face.

4. To ſprain; to weaken by too much violence.
The jury make no more ſcruple to paſs againſt an Engliſh- n d the queen, though it be to ſtrain their oaths, than to drink m lk unſtrained. Spenſer's State of Ireland.
Prudes decay'd about may tack,
Strain the r necks w th looking back Swift

5. To put to its utmoſt ſtrength.
By this we ſee in a cauſe of religion, to how deſperate adventures men will ſt ain themſelves for relief of their own part, having aw and authority againſt them. Hooker.
Too well I wote my humble vaine,
And how my rhimes beep rugged and unkempt,
Yet as I con my cunning I will ſtrain. Spenſer.
Thus mine enemy fell,
And thus I ſet my foot on's neck;—even then
The princely blood flows in his cheek, he ſweats,
Strains h s young nerves, and puts himſelf in poſture
That acts my words. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.
My earthly by his heavenly overpower'd,
Which it had long ſtood under, ſtrain'd to th' height
In that celeſtial colloquy ſublime,
As with an object that excels the ſenſe,
Dazzled and ſpent, ſunk down. Milton's Parad. Loſt.
The lark and linnet ſing with rival notes;
They ſtrain their warbling throats,
To welcome in the ſpring. Dryden.
Nor yet content, ſhe ſtrain her malice more,
And adds new ills to thoſe contriv'd before. Dryden.
It is the worſt ſort of good huſbandry for a father not to ſtrain himſelf a little for his ſon's breeding. Locke.
Our words flow from us in a ſmooth continued ſtream, without thoſe ſtrainings of the voice, motions of the body, and ity of the hand, which are ſo much celebrated in the orators of Greece and Rome. Atterbury
Strain'd to the root, the ſtooping foreſt pours
A ruſhing ſhower of yet untimely leaves. Thomſon.

6. To make ſtraight or tenſe.
A bigger ſtring more ſtrained, and a leſſer ſtring leſs ſtrained, may fall into the ſame tone. Bacon.
Thou, the more he varies forms, beware
To ſtrain his fetters with a ſtricter care. Dryden's Virgil.

7. To puſh beyond the proper extent.
See they ſuffer death,
Put in their deaths remember they are men,
Strain not the laws to make their torture grievous Addiſon.
There can be no other meaning in this expreſſion, however one may pretend to ſtrain it. Swift.

SUBLIMATION n. ſ. [ſublimation, Fr. from ſublimate]

1. A chemical operation which raiſes bodies in the veſſel by the force of fire.

Sublimation differs very little from ſublimation, except that in ſublimation, only the fluid parts of bodies are raiſed, but in this the ſolid and dry, and that the matter to be ſublimed may be either ſolid or fluid, but ſublimation is only concerned about ſolid ſubſtances. There is alſo another difference, namely, that rarefaction, which is of very great uſe in ſublimation, has hardly any room in ſublimation, for the ſubſtances which are to be ſublimed being ſolid are incapable of rarefaction, and ſo it is only impoſſible that can raiſe them Quincy

Separation is wrought by weight, as in the ſettlement of liquors, by heat, by precipitation or ſublimation; that is a calling of the ſeveral parts up or down, which is a kind of attraction Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Since oil of ſulphur per campanam is of the ſame nature with oil of vitriol, may it not be aſcribed that ſulphur is a mixture of volatile and fixed parts ſo ſtrongly cohering by attraction, as to aſcend together by ſublimation. Newton Opt.

2. Exaltation; elevation; act of heightening or improving

She turns
Rods to ſpirits, by ſublimation ſtrange. Dryden.

Shall he pretend to religious attainments, who is defective and ſhort in moral, which are but the rudiments and firſt draught of religion, as religion is the perfection, refinement, and ſublimation of morality? South.

Oh adderlocks, your art of it doth remove
The thing which elemented it. Donne.

Night meaſured with her ſhadowy cone,
Half way up hill has vaſt ſublunar vault. Milton.

Through ſeas of knowledge we our courſe advance,
Diſcovering ſtill new worlds of ignorance;
And thoſe diſcoveries make us all confeſs
That ſublunary ſcience is but gueſs Denham.

The celeſtial bodies above the moon being not ſubject to chance, remained in perpetual order, while all things ſublunary are ſubject to change. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

Ovid has warn'd her to beware
Of ſtraying goes, whoſe uſual trade is,
Under pretence of taking air,
To pick up ſublunary ladies. Swift.

SUBMARINE. adj. [ſub and mare.] Lying or acting under the ſea.

This contrivance may ſeem difficult, becauſe theſe ſubmarine navigators want words and time for motion, and the ſight of the heavens for direction. Wilkins.

Not only the herbaceous and woody ſubmarine plants, but alſo the lithophyta affect this manner of growing, as I obſerved in corals. Ray on the Creation.

To SUBMERGE v. a. [ſubmerger, Fr. ſubmerge, Lat.] To drown, to put under water.

So hath my Egypt were ſubmerg'd and made
A ciſtern for ſcal'd ſnakes. Shakeſpeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

SUBMERSION. n. ſ. [ſubmerſion, Fr from ſubmerſus, Latin.]

The great Atlantick iſland is mentioned in Plato's Timæus, almoſt contiguous to the weſtern parts of Spain and Africa, yet wholly ſwallowed up by that ocean which if true, might afford a paſſage from Africa to America by land before that ſubmerſion. Hale's Origination of Mankind.

To SUBMINISTER } v. a. [ſubminiſtro, Latin.] To ſup-
To SUBMINISTRATE. } ply; to afford. A word not much in uſe.

Some things have been diſcovered, not only by the induſtry of mankind, but even the inferiour animals have ſubminiſtred unto man the invention of many things, natural, artificial, and medicinal. Hale's Original of Mankind.

Nothing ſubminiſtrates apter matter to be converted into peſtilent ſeminaries, than ſteams of naſty folks. Harvey.

To SUBMINISTER v. n. To ſubſerve.

Our paſſions, as fire and water, are good ſervants, but bad maſters, and ſubminiſter to the beſt and worſt of purpoſes. L'Eſtrange.

SUBMISS. adj. [from ſubmiſſus, Lat.] Humble, ſubmiſſive; obſequious.

King James mollified by the biſhop's ſubmiſs and eloquent letters, wrote back, that though he were in part moved by his letters, yet he ſhould not be fully ſatisfied except he ſpake with him. Bacon's Hen. VII.

Nearer his preſence, Adam though not aw'd,
Yet with ſubmiſs approach, and reverence meek,
As to a ſuperior nature, bowed low. Milton's Par. Loſt.

Bowing, but with awe,
In adoration at his feet I fell,
Submiſs, he rear'd me. Milton.

SUBMISSION. n. ſ. [ſoumiſſion, Fr from ſubmiſſus, Lat.]

In all ſubmiſſion and humility,
York doth preſent himſelf unto your highneſs. Shakeſpeare.

Great prince, by that ſubmiſſion you ſhall gain more
Than ever your haughty courage won before Hayward.

3. Acknowledgment of a fault; confeſſion of error.

Be not as extreme in ſubmiſſion, as in offence. Shakeſpeare.

4. Obſequiouſneſs; reſignation, obedience.

No duty in religion is more juſtly required by God Almighty than a perfect ſubmiſſion to his will in all things. Temple.

SUBMISSIVE. adj. [ſubmiſſus, Lat.] Humble, teſtifying ſubmiſſion or inferiority.

On what ſubmiſſive meſſage art thou ſent? Shakeſpeare.

Her at my feet ſubmiſſive in diſtreſs
He thus with peaceful words upraiſed
Sudden from the golden throne,
With a ſubmiſſive ſtep I haſted down,
Threw my wanton garland from my hair I took,
Love in my heart, obedience in my look. Prior.

SUBMISSIVELY. adv. [from ſubmiſſive.] Humbly, with confeſſion of inferiority.

The goddeſs,
Often in her time, ſubmiſſively repines. Dryden's Knight.

Speech ev'n there ſubmiſſively withdraws
From rights of ſubjects, and the poor man's cauſe,
Then pompous inſolence reigns, and ſilks the noiſy laws. Pope.

SUBMISSIVENESS. n. ſ. [from ſubmiſſive] Humility, confeſſion of fault, or inferiority.

If thou find a ware and wantonneſs,
Boaſt not thereof, nor make thy ſhame thy glory;
Frailty gets pardon by ſubmiſſiveneſs,
But he that boaſts, ſtuts hat out of his ſtory:
He makes flat war with God, and doth defy,
With his poor clod of earth, the ſpacious ſky. Herbert.

SUBMISSLY. adv. [from ſubmiſs.] Humbly; with ſubmiſſion.

Humility conſiſts, not in wearing mean habits, and going ſoftly and ſubmiſſly, but in hearty mean opinion of thyſelf. Taylor.

To SUBMIT. v. a. [ſoumettre, Fr ſubmitto, Latin.]

1. To let down, to ſink.

Sometimes the baſe ſubmits itſelf a while
In ſmall concerns, which on its height beguile,
And ſometimes mounts, but ſo as boys will play,
Whoſe riſe not raiſers, but makes ſhort our way. Dryden.

Neptune flood,
With all his hoſts of waters at command,
Beneath them to ſubmit th' officious flood,
And with his trident ſhov'd them off the ſand Dryden.

2. To ſubject, to reſign without reſiſtance to authority.

SUBSE'QUENTIVE. adj. [from subsequor] Following in train.

SUBSEPTU'PLE. adj. [sub and septuplus, Latin.] Containing one of seven parts.

If unto this lower pulley there were added another, then the power would be unto the weight in a subquintuple proportion, if a third, a subseptuple. Wilkins.

SU'BSEQUENT. adj. [subsequent Fr. subsequent, Latin. The word is improperly pronounced long in the second syllable Shakespeare.] Following in train, not preceding.

In such indexes, although small pricks
To their subsequent volumes, there is seen
The baby figure of the giant mass
Of things to come, at large. Shakesp. Troil. and Cressida.

The subsequent words come on before the precedent vanish. Locke.

Why does each consenting sign
With prudent harmony combine
In turns to move, and subsequent appear
To gird the globe and regulate the year? Prior

This

This article is introduced as subsequent to the treaty of Munster, made about 1648, when England was in the utmost confusion. Swift.

SUBSEQUENTLY adv. [from subsequent] Not so as to go before, so as to follow in train.

To men in governing most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends, but they are forced to comply subsequently, and to strike in with things as they fall out, by politic serious after-applications of them to their purposes. South's Sermons.

To SUBSERVE v. a. [subservio, Latin] To serve in subordination, to serve instrumentally.

Not made to rule,
But to subserve where wisdom bears command Milton.

It is a greater credit to know the ways of captivating nature, and making her subserve our purposes, than to have learned all the intrigues of policy Glanvil's

The memory hath no special part of the brain devoted to its own service, but uses all those parts which subserve our sensations, as well as our thinking powers. Watts.

SUBSERVIENCE, SUBSERVIENCY n. s. [from subservire] Instrumental fitness or use.

Wicked spirits may by their cunning, carry farther in a seeming confederacy or subserviency to the designs of a good angel. Dryden

We cannot look upon the body, wherein appears so much fitness use, and subserviency to infinite functions, any otherwise than as the effect of contrivance Bentley

There is an immediate and apt subserviency of the spirits to the empire of the soul. Hale's Originat. of Mankind.

There is a regular subordination and subserviency among all the parts to beneficial ends. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles

SUBSERVIENT adj. [subservientis, Latin] Subordinate; instrumentally useful.

Philosophers and common heathens believed one God, to whom all things are referred; but under this God they worshipped many inferior and subservient gods. Stillingfleet

These ranks of creatures are subservient one to another, and the most of them serviceable to man Ray.

While awake, we feel none of those motions continually made in the disposal of the corporeal principles subservient herein. Grew.

Sense is subservient unto fancy, fancy unto intellect. Grew.

We are not to consider the world as the body of God; he is an uniform being, void of organs, members or parts, and they are his creatures subordinate to him, and subservient to his will. Newton's Opticks.

Most critics, fond of some subservient art,
Still make the whole depend upon a part;
They talk of principles, but notions prize,
And all to one lov'd folly sacrifice. Pope.

SUBSEXTUPLE. adj. [sub and sextuplus, Latin] Containing one part of six.

One of these under pullies abates half of that heaviness the weight hath, and causes the power to be in a subduple proportion unto it, two of them a subquadruple proportion, three a subsextuple. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick

To SUBSIDE. v. n. [subsido, Latin] To sink; to tend downwards.

He shook the sacred honours of his head
With terror tremoled heav'ns subsiding hill,
And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distill. Dryden.

Now Jove suspends his golden scales in air,
Weighs the men's wits against the lady's hair,
The doubtful beam long nods from side to side:
At length the wits mount up, the hairs subside. Pope.

SUBSIDENCE, SUBSIDENCY n. s. [from subside] The act of sinking; tendency downward.

This gradual subsidency of the abyss would take up a considerable time. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

This miscellany of bodies being determined to subsidence merely by their different specifick gravities, all those which had the same gravity subsided at the same time. Woodward.

By the alternate motion of those air-bladders, whose surfaces are by turns freed from mutual contact, and by a sudden subsidence meet again by the ingress and egress of the air, the liquour is still farther attenuated Arbuthnot.

SUBSIDIARY adj. [subsidiaire, Fr. subsidiarius, Lat. from subsidy] Assistant; brought in aid.

Bitter substances burn the blood, and are a sort of subsidiary gall. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

SUBSIDY. n. s. [subside, Fr subsidium, Latin.] Aid, commonly such as is given in money.

They advised the king to send speedy aids, and with much alacrity granted a great rate of subsidy. Bacon.

This all the subsidy the present age can raise. Dryden.

It is a celebrated notion of a patriot, that a house of commons should never grant such subsidies as give no pain to the people, lest the nation should acquiesce under a burden they did not feel. Addison

To SUBSIGN. v. a. [subsigno, Latin] To sign under.

Neither have they seen any deed before the conquest, but subscribed with crosses and single names without surnames. Cowel.

To SUBSIST. v. n. [subsister, Fr subsisto, Latin.]

Then we subsist, but possible to swerve, Milton.

The very foundation was removed, and it was a moral impossibility that the republick could subsist any longer. Swift.

2. To have means of living, to be maintained.

He shone so powerfully upon me, that like the heat of a Russian summer, he ripened the fruits of poetry in a cold climate; and gave me wherewithal to subsist in the long winter which succeeded. Dryden.

Let us remember those that want necessaries, as we ourselves should have desired to be remembred, had it been our fate to subsist on other mens charity Atterbury.

3. To inhere, to have existence.

Though the general natures of these qualities are sufficiently distant from one another, yet when they come to subsist in particulars, and to be clothed with several accidents, then the discernment is not so easy South's Sermons.

SUBSISTENCE, or Subsistency. n. s. [subsistance, Fr. from subsist]

1. Real being.

The flesh, and the conjunction of the flesh with God began both at one instant, his making and taking to himself our flesh was but one act, so that in Christ there is no personal subsistence but one, and that from everlasting. Hooker.

We know as little how the union is dissolved, that is the chain of these differing subsistences that compound us, as how [illegible]

Not only the things had subsistence, but the very images were [illegible]

2. Competence, means of supportance.

His viceroy could only propose to himself a comfortable subsistence out of the plunder of his province Addison.

SUBSISTENT adj. subsistens. Latin] Having real being.

Such as deny spirits subsistent without bodies, will with difficulty [illegible]

These qualities are not subsistent in those bodies, but are operations of fancy begotten in something else. Bentley.

SUBSTANCE. n. s. [substance, Fr, substantia, Latin]

1. Being; something existing, something of which we can say that it is.

Since then the soul works by herself alone,
Springs not from sense, nor humours well agreeing,
Her nature is peculiar, and her own;
She is a substance, and a perfect being. Davies.

The strength of gods,
And this empyreal substance cannot fail. Milton.

2. That which supports accidents.

What creatures there inhabit, of what mould,
And substance Milton.

Every being is considered as subsisting in and by itself, and then it is called a substance, or it subsists in and by another, and then it is called a mode or manner of being. Watts.

3. The essential part.

It will serve our turn to comprehend the substance, without confining ourselves to scrupulous exactness in form Digby.

This edition is the same in substance with the Latin. Burn.

They are the best epitomes, and let you see with one cast of the eye the substance of a hundred pages. Addison.

4. Something real, not imaginary; something solid, not empty shadows to night

Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard,
Than can the substance of ten thousand soldiers
Arm'd in proof and led by shallow Richard. Shakespeare.

He the future evil shall no less
In apprehension than in substance feel. Milton.

Heroick virtue did his actions guide,
And he the substance, not th' appearance chose:
To rescue one such friend he took more pride,
Than to destroy whole thousands of such foes. Dryden.

5. Body; corporeal nature.

Between the parts of opake and coloured bodies are many spaces, either empty or replenished with mediums of other densities; as water between the tinging corpuscles wherewith any liquor is impregnated, air between the aqueous globules that constitute clouds or mists, and for the most part spaces void of both air and water; but yet perhaps not wholly void of all substance between the parts of hard bodies. Newton

The qualities of plants are more various than those of animal substances. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

6. Wealth, means of life.

He hath eaten me out of house and home, and hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his, but I will have some of it out again. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

We are destroying many thousand lives, and exhausting our substance, but not for our own interest. Swift.

SUBSTANTIAL. adj [substantiel, Fr. from substance.]

1. Real, actually existing.

If this atheist would have his chance to be a real and substantial agent, he is more stupid than the vulgar. Bentley.

2. True, ſolid; real, not merely ſeeming.

O bleſſed! bleſſed night! I am afraid,
Being in night, all this is but a dream;
Too flattering ſweet to be ſubſtantial. Shakeſpeare.

To give thee being, I lent
Out of my ſide to thee, neareſt my heart,
Subſtantial life. Milton.

If happineſs be a ſubſtantial good,
Not fram'd of accidents, nor ſubject to them,
I err'd to ſeek it in a blind revenge. Denham.

Time, as a river, hath brought down to us what is more light and ſuperficial, while things more ſolid and ſubſtantial have been ſunnerſed Grew.

The difference betwixt the empty vanity of oſtentation, and the ſubſtantial ornaments of virtue. L'Eſtrange.

Obſervations are the only ſure grounds whereon to build a laſting and ſubſtantial philoſophy. Woodward.

A ſolid and ſubſtantial greatneſs of ſoul, looks down with neglect on the cenſures and applauſes of the multitude. Addiſon.

3. Corporeal; material.

Now ſhine theſe planets with ſubſtantial rays?
Does innate luſtre gild their meaſur'd days? Prior.

The ſun appears flat like a plate of ſilver, the moon as big as the ſun, and the rainbow a large ſubſtantial arch in the ſky, all which are groſs falſhoods. Watts.

4. Strong; ſtout, bulky.

Subſtantial doors,
Croſs-barr'd and bolted faſt, fear no aſſault. Milton.

5. Reſponſible; moderately wealthy

Trials of crimes and titles of right ſhall be made by verdict of a jury, choſen out of the honeſt and moſt ſubſtantial freeholders. Spenſer on Ireland.

The merchants, and ſubſtantial citizens, cannot make up more than a hundred thouſand families. Addiſon on the War.

SUBSTA'NTIALS. n. ſ. [Without ſingular.] Eſſential parts.

Although a cuſtom introduced againſt the ſubſtantials of an appeal be not valid, as that it ſhould not be appealed to a ſuperior, but to an inferior judge, yet a cuſtom may be introduced againſt the accidentals of an appeal Ayliffe's Parergon.

SUBSTANTIA'LITY. n. ſ. [from ſubſtantial.]

1. The ſtate of real exiſtence.

2. Corporeity; materiality.

Body cannot act on any thing but by motion; motion cannot be received but by quantity and matter: the ſoul is a ſtranger to ſuch groſs ſubſtantiality, and owns nothing of theſe. Glanv. Scepſ.

SUBSTA'NTIALLY. adv. [from ſubſtantial.]

1. In manner of a ſubſtance; with reality of exiſtence.

In him his Father ſhone ſubſtantially expreſs'd. Milton.

4. With competent wealth

SUBSTANTIALNESS. n. ſ. [from ſubſtantial.]

1. The ſtate of being ſubſtantial.

2. Firmneſs, ſtrength; power of holding or laſting.

When ſubſtantialneſs combineth with delightfulneſs, fulneſs with fineneſs, how can the language which conſiſteth of theſe [illegible] conſiſt of ſweetneſs? Carpenter's Rhetorick.

In degree of ſubſtantialneſs next above the dorique, ſuſtaining the third, and adorning the ſecond ſtory. Wotton.

To SUBSTA'NTIATE. v. a. [from ſubſtance.] To make to exiſt.

The accidentals of any act is ſaid to be whatever advenes to the act itſelf already ſubſtantiated. Ayliffe's Parergon.

SUBSTANTIVE. n. ſ. [ſubſtantif, French; ſubſtantivum, Latin.] A noun betokening the thing, not a quality.

Claudian perpetually cloſes his ſenſe at the end of a verſe, commonly called golden, or two ſubſtantives and two adjectives with a verb betwixt them. Dryden.

SUBSTA'NTIVE. adj. [ſubſtantivus, Latin.]

1. Solid, depending only on itſelf. Not in uſe.

He conſidered how ſufficient and ſubſtantive this land was to maintain itſelf, without any aid of the foreigner. Bacon.

2. Betokening exiſtence.

One is obliged to join many particulars in one propoſition, becauſe the repetition of the ſubſtantive verb would be tedious. Arb.

To SU'BSTITUTE. v. a. [ſubſtituer, Fr. ſubſtituo, from ſub and ſtatuo, Latin.] To put in the place of another.

In the original deſigns of ſpeaking, a man can ſubſtitute none for them that can equally conduce to his honour. Gov. of Tongue.

If a ſworthy tongue

SUPPOSI'TION. n. ſ. [ſuppoſition, French, from ſuppoſe.] Poſition laid down; hypotheſis; imagination yet unproved.
In ſaying he is a good man, underſtand me that he is ſufficient, yet his means are in ſuppoſition. Shakeſpeare.
Sing, ſyren, for thyſelf, and I will dote,
Spread o'er the ſilver waves thy golden hairs,
And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lye;
And in that glorious ſuppoſition think
He gains by death, that hath ſuch means to die.
This is only an infallibility upon ſuppoſition, that if a thing be [illegible]
Such an original irreſiſtible notion is neither requiſite upon ſuppoſition of a Deity, nor is pretended to by religion. Bentley.

SUPPOSITI'TIOUS. adj. [from ſuppoſitus, ſuppoſititius, Lat.] Not genuine; put by a trick into the place or character belonging to another.
The deſtruction of Muſtapha was ſo fatal to Solyman's line, as the ſucceſſion of the Turks from Solyman is ſuſpected to be of ſtrange blood; for that Selymus II. was thought to be ſuppoſititious. Bacon.
It is their opinion that no man ever killed his father, but that, if it ſhould ever happen, the reputed ſon muſt have been illegitimate, ſuppoſititious, or begotten in adultery. Addiſon.

feed upon herbs and some sort of grain like a goose, and some are said to have lived three hundred years. There is a species of swans with the feathers of their heads, towards the breast, marked at the ends with a gold colour inclining to red. The swan is reckoned by Moses among the unclean creatures; but it was consecrated to Apollo the god of music, because it was said to sing melodiously when it was near expiring; a tradition generally received, but fabulous. Cowel.

With untuned eye
Compare her face with some that I shall show,
And I will make thee think thy swan a crow. Shakespeare.
Let music sound, while he doth make his choice,
Then if he lose, he makes a swan like end. Shakespeare.
I have seen a swan,
With bootless labour, swim against the tide,
And spend her strength with over-matching waves. Shakesp.
The birds easy to be drawn are plainpedes, or water fowl, as the mallard, goose, and swan. Peacham on Drawing.

The fearful matrons raise a screaming cry,
Old feeble men with fainter groans reply,
A jarring sound revolts, and mingles in the sky,
Like that of swans remurmuring to the floods. Dryden.

The idea, which an Englishman signifies by the name swan, is a white colour, long neck, black beak, black legs, and whole feet, and all these of a certain size, with a power of swimming in the water, and making a certain kind of noise. Locke.

1. Something that happens concurrently with ſomething elſe, not as the original cauſe, nor as the neceſſary or conſtant effect.

2. A ſign; a token.

Ten glorious campaigns are paſſed, and now, like the ſick man, we are expiring with all ſorts of good ſymptoms. Swift.

SYMPTOMA'TICAL } adj. [ſymptomatique, French; from ſymp-
SYMPTOMA'TICK. } tom.] Happening concurrently, or occaſionally.

Symptomatical is often uſed to denote the difference between the primary and ſecondary cauſes in diſeaſes; as a fever from pain is ſaid to be ſymptomatical, becauſe it ariſes from pain only, and therefore the ordinary means in fevers are not in ſuch caſes to be had recourſe to, but to what will remove the pain; for when that ceaſes, the fever will ceaſe, without any direct means taken for that. Quincy.

By fomentation and a cataplaſm the ſwelling was diſcuſſed; and the fever, then appearing but ſymptomatical, leſſened as the heat and pain mitigated. Wiſeman's Surgery.

SYMPTOMA'TICALLY. adv. [from ſymptomatical.] In the nature of a ſymptom.

The cauſes of a bubo are vicious humours abounding in the blood, or in the nerves, excreted ſometimes critically, ſometimes ſymptomatically. Wiſeman.

1. To be buſy with phyſick.

'Tis in vain
To tamper with your crazy brain,
Without trepanning of your ſkull,
As often as the moon's at full. Hudibras, p. ii.

He tried waſhes to bring him to a better complexion but there was no good to be done, the very tampering caſt him into a diſeaſe L'Eſtrange's Fables.

2. To meddle; to have to do without fitneſs or neceſſity.

That key of knowledge, which ſhould give us entrance into the receſſes of religion, is by ſo much tampered and wrenching made uſeleſs. Decay of Piety.

'Tis dang'rous tampering with a muſe,
The profits ſmall, and you have much to loſe:
For though true wit adorns your birth or place,
Degenerate lines degrade the attainted race. Roſcommon.

Earl Waltheof being overtaken with wine, engaged in a conſpiracy, but repenting next morning, repaired to the king, and diſcovered the whole matter: notwithſtanding which he was beheaded upon the defeat of the conſpiracy, for having but thus far tampered in it. Addiſon's Freeholder.

They ſell us their bark at a good price for tanning our hides into leather. Swift's Miſcel.

2. To imbrown by the ſun

His face all tann'd with ſcorching ſunny ray,
As he had travell'd many a Summer's day
Through boiling ſands of Araby and Ind. Fa. Qu. b

Like ſun parch'd quarters on the city gates,
Such is thy tann'd ſkin's ſad complexion ſtate. I

A brown for which heaven would unſtand
The galaxy, and ſtars be tann'd. Cleaveland.

TANE for taken, ta'en.

Two trophees tane from th' Eaſt and Weſtern ſhore,
And both thoſe nations twice triumphed o'er. Waller's Poems.

TANG n. ſ. [tangbe, Dutch, acrid]

1. A ſtrong taſte; a taſte left on the mouth.

Sin taken into the ſoul, is like a liquor poured into a veſſel, ſo much of it as it ſhares it alſo ſeaſons, ſo that although the

the buoy of the liquor ſhould be poured out again, yet ſtill it leaves that tang behind it. South's Sermons.

It is ſtrange that the ſoul ſhould never once recal over any of its pure native thoughts, before it borrowed any thing from the body, never bring into the waking man's view any other ideas but what have a tang of the caſk, and derive their original from that mixture. Locke.

2. Reliſh, taſte. A low word.

There was not the leaſt tang of religion, which is indeed the worſt character of any thing he ſaid or did. Atterbury.

3. Something that leaves a ſting or pain behind it.

I do, quoth he, perceive
My king is tangled in affection to
A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen. Shakeſpeare.

You muſt lay lime to tangle her deſires
By wanton ſonnets, whoſe compoſed rhimes
Shall be full caught with ſerviceable vows. Shakeſpeare.

If thou retire, the dauphin, well appointed,
Stands with the ſnares of war to tangle thee. Shakeſp.

Now ſly victorious
Among thy ſlain ſelf kill'd,
Not willingly, but tangled in the fold
Of dire neceſſity Milton's Agon.

, and in retiring draw
Hearts after them, tangled in amorous nets. Milton.

With ſubtle cobweb cheats,
They're catch'd in knotted law-like nets;
In which when once they are entangled,
The more they ſtir, the more they're tangled. L.

3. To embroil, to embarraſs.

When my ſimple weakneſs ſtrays,
Tangled in forbidden way
He, my ſhepherd, is my guide,
He's before me, on my ſide.

One of the Greek orator's antagonists reading over the oration that procured his banishment, and seeing his friends admire it, asked them, if they were so much affected by the bare reading, how much more they would have been alarmed if they had heard him actually throwing out such a storm of eloquence. Addison.

There is no need to throw words of contempt on such a practice, the very description of it carries reproof. Watts.

7. To spread in haste.

O'er his fair limbs a flow'ry vest he threw,
And still'd like a god to mortal view. Pope's Odyssey.

8. To overturn in wrestling.

If the sinner shall not only wrestle with this angel, but throw him too, and win so complete a victory over his conscience, that all these considerations shall be able to strike no terrour into his mind, he is too strong for grace. South.

9. To drive, to send by force.

Myself distrest, an exile and unknown,
D[illegible] A[illegible],
In Libyan deserts wander thus alone. Dryden's Æn.

When seamen are thrown upon any unknown coast in America, they never venture upon the fruit of any tree, unless they observe it marked with the pecking of birds. Addison.

Poor youth! how canst thou throw him from thee?
Lucia, thou know'st not half the love he bears thee. Add.

10. To make to act at a distance.

Throw out our eyes for brave Othello,
Even till we make th' aerial blue
An indistinct regard. Shakesp. Othello.

11. To repose.
